

Monograph Eighteen: The Second Coming

The mythologies of Christianity and Judaism hold an echo of the Knowledge of the ancients because these religions have their roots in Ancient Egypt. But that echo is much-altered, as is our interpretation of the mythologies, courtesy of the distorting filters of indoctrination and institutionalisation. To reconnect with the Knowledge in its original and purest form we need to go back to the source – the mythologies of Ancient Egypt. When we know how to decode them, those mythologies have much to tell us.

A Covenant Made and a Promise Given

I have a very handy ability to Create* in my reality whatever I need to alter my thought processes and set them flowing where I need them to flow. Actually, it was a covenant made, a promise given, many years ago, when I felt a book in my hands that was not there and was told whatever I needed would be brought into my hands.

So I came across Graham Hancock's writing a long time ago, and his Work* has continued to come into my reality as per that covenant, which means he has continued, over the decades, to engage in Work that is powerfully relevant and highly significant.

It is tempting to say if one person's Work has fed into mine more powerfully than that of any other it would be Graham Hancock's, but that would devalue the Work of so many others to whom I owe my great debt of gratitude. I certainly highly recommend his books, *Fingerprints of the Gods*¹ and its follow up, *Magicians of the Gods*².

He it was who first opened my eyes to the fact that our history is not at all as we've been led to believe. The orthodox views of our history are largely determined by the institutionalised religions (and their religious texts) that bind us up in misguided belief and mindset, so if anyone was going to set us free of that thinking they themselves had to be free of it. They had to be open minded, and I mean really open minded.

Our Pathway Through Our Own History

But if we don't know our own true history, how can we know ourselves? We can't. Collectively and individually, we are the sum total of everything that has come before us. We are moulded and shaped by our past, but how can we understand the dynamics of this, the whys and wherefores, if we don't know what our past is?

And I'm not just referring to the different and multiple iterations of the human experience as governed by the cycle of Orion. I'm referring to this iteration, our iteration, and our pathway through it.

I'm referring to what we started out with – a powerful connection to the divine gnosis and the practice of good governance – and I'm referring to what we started out as – our existence in and as a higher state of consciousness.

And I'm referring to the slow but definite descent of our consciousness into the quagmire of materiality and a purely physical existence, and the Perpetual Separation* of our consciousness, and the chronic ignorance of our society.

How Dumb We Are

No one, regardless of how intelligent they are, can arrive at Truth* and Knowledge* through an observation and assessment of the physical world only. No one. It's impossible because Truth isn't physical, it's metaphysical, and our Truth is metaphysical because we are metaphysical beings, despite the fact that we have become almost purely physical in our expression and experience.

We do not exist in our Truth, or even close to it. We exist in illusion, as illusion.

When you separate the physical from its source, metaphysicality, which is what we've done to and with ourselves, no matter how intelligent you think you are, you are dumb.

Humanity makes such dumb observations of the universe around us, not to mention choices. We operate within limits and boundaries around our thoughts, beliefs and mindsets that can only ever at best give rise to dumb choices and observations.

It doesn't help that we are deliberately being kept dumb, just as we are deliberately being kept ill, physically and psychologically. Concealing many Truths from us is a vital element of the Dark* agenda, and never more so than with our own history.

To this end, they have gone to great lengths over many centuries to destroy the Knowledge held by the ancients, passed down over aeons of time, predominantly through the ancient priesthoods.

In fact, I happen to know they of the Darkness laugh and scoff at our gullibility and the ease with which we are manipulated. Such derision is born, I think, from the fact that they need us, and they know it. They can denigrate us all they like, but I know just how much they need us. They are entirely dependent on us.

So what would happen to them, then, if we started to fight back, to shake off the inertia and apathy, and stand up to their Dark manipulations? They would be in serious trouble. This, they know.

The Transformational Power of Knowledge

There is an antidote to dumbness. Knowledge, even lower knowledge, but particularly higher, transcendent Knowledge, is powerful in its effects on consciousness, on society, on reality, on well being and living standards, on psychological and physical health, and on intangibles like inner strength and confidence.

But never more so is this true than with self Knowledge. The ancients agree with me, or, rather, I agree with them. Over the entrance to the Temple at Delphi in Ancient Greece was the simple mantra Know Thyself (*The Matrix*⁷ makes a pointed reference to it, too).

I could argue the merits of self Knowledge until I run out of breath, but my Merlin has saved me the trouble:-

*“There's no better sustenance. It prepares you for what is to come, it changes your belief, it aligns you with the truth of who you are, it makes you strong, and it brings your power, your Light, to the surface of you such that it emanates from you, permeating and influencing your thoughts, your dreams, and your image of yourself. In other words, knowledge transforms you.”*³

And this is as true for us as a collective as it is for us as individuals.

The Trouble with the Modern World

The real trouble for us in this, our very modern world, is our consciousness, in its current Perpetually Separated, chronically-ignorant state, cannot handle the higher, transcendent Knowledge that can and will transform us – Knowledge we must assimilate if we are to connect with the truth of who we are and where we've come from, and if we are to reach for and fulfil a higher potential.

We think we are knowledgeable about our history now, so the higher, divine Knowledge that was, and still is, our rightful heritage – the Knowledge that was faithfully preserved and protected by the ancient priesthoods – would butt up against and meet the resistance of our ignorant beliefs.

Such Knowledge would certainly contradict many of our religious texts, and I know that, alone, would spell trouble for many individuals. I am not being melodramatic when I say humans have killed for far less right across the entirety of our known history. Nothing comes out fighting like an indoctrinated, institutionalised mind in protection of that very same indoctrination.

Penetrating the Fog of Anaesthetisation and Apathy

Transcendent Knowledge will break down the bedrock of chronic ignorance that characterises modern society and it will push through the barriers and boundaries around our beliefs and mindsets, especially those we hold about ourselves, but only for those with open and flexible minds, of whom there are precious few.

Closed, rigid minds can and will only resist, and in their resistance they will attack, criticise and ridicule. They will tear the Knowledge down, and anyone who disseminates it, like a pack of hyenas bringing down, fighting over and tearing apart their prey.

What's worse now, though (and here you will have to excuse my cynicism), is that I think many people will simply not bother to drag their focus from what's trending on social media.

Knowledge? What Knowledge? Who cares. For some people, nothing penetrates the fog of anaesthetisation and apathy, even before it has a chance to butt up against the boundaries imposed by ignorant mindsets.

It seems to me there has to be some kind of preparation before we can confront the Truth of who we really are, of who we are not, of where we've come from, of what we're truly capable of, and of where we can potentially go from here.

Either that or humanity will have to collectively walk smack into a trigger for powerful transformational change, like I did. I suspect this just might be the preferred option . . .

The Knowledge of the Ancients

The Knowledge of the ancients can help us know who we are and where we've come from, and it has remained. Or, rather, it is accessible . . . or a semblance of it is. We have inherited it, encoded, as it is, in the ancient monuments, not just those of Ancient Egypt², and in the myths and philosophies of the ancient religions, particularly those of the Ancient Egyptians.

But to tap into that Knowledge we need to adjust our way of thinking. We need to start thinking like them. We need to start thinking holistically. We need to start thinking like a Hermeticist.

Hermetic Thought and Knowledge

The label 'Hermeticism' is derived from Hermes Trismegistus, the Egyptian god Thoth, whom the Greeks associated with Hermes. The epithet Trismegistus (meaning thrice greatest) was given to him to distinguish the Egyptian Hermes from the Greek Hermes. He was an Egyptian sage who, it was believed, existed in the mists of antiquity and who authored some great works collectively known as the *Hermetica*⁹.

Rather than being an actual person, Hermes Trismegistus is an archetype, one that is not of the body like a normal archetype but is, rather, of the soul. He is the purely metaphysical aspect of consciousness that awakens and leads us, those who know the way, through the labyrinthine psyche into the higher state of consciousness within which the divine gnosis is accessible and attained.

The Hermetica, as a collection of works, was written by one or a group of Egyptian high initiates, but its modern form has come to us courtesy of the scholars of Alexandria, who collated it in the 2nd and 3rd centuries CE⁹. As such, despite Thoth's advice *that all possible measures should be taken to prevent these holy secrets being corrupted by translation into Greek*⁹, that is exactly what occurred.

Such is the power of the Hermetica, and such is the human response to Hermetic wisdom, that the injection of it into European society many centuries ago had a profound effect on European consciousness as a whole, hence the Renaissance and the so-called official end of the Dark Ages (although I think we didn't fully emerge from the Dark Ages).

What's important about Hermetic thought is that the same higher states of being, and, more specifically, the divine gnosis accessible and available in those higher states of being, was the very premise and substance of the priesthood of Ancient Egypt.

And, therefore, Hermetic thought is the very substance of the Ancient Egyptian myths and mythologies we've inherited today, and it is the very substance of the Ancient Egyptian religion-philosophy.

Egyptian Magic

Courtesy of their belief system, even the ordinary masses were aware of and connected with the energetic, multi-dimensional nature of consciousness, even if they couldn't articulate it as such. This awareness was weaved into every aspect of their daily lives, hence their use of magic.

If we think of magic as the knowledge of thought and energy, how to harness and use both to shape, influence and work with consciousness and reality, the Ancient Egyptians did not view it with the kind of superstitious caution with which we approach magic today. Nor did they equate it with black witches and witchcraft, and nor did they ever put the label on it of 'evil'.

On the contrary, magic very much formed part of the fabric of their religion-philosophy, which itself was weaved into the fabric of their society. So even the ordinary people knew the power and value of symbolic talismans and amulets, for example, and how powerful prayers, spells and incantations were, all of which they utilised in their daily lives.

To put it simply, their belief system innately held a Knowledge of what is and how to apply it to daily life. Far from being evil, such a belief system is supremely healthy.

What is the Point of Belief?

What is the point of belief if it is not close to, or bears no resemblance to, Truth? What is the point of belief if it contradicts Truth? You might believe in something passionately, but so what, if it simply isn't anywhere near the Truth?

Whatever you believe, or don't believe, as is your choice, it makes no difference to Truth. Truth remains the same. So belief either connects you with Truth or it doesn't. But if it doesn't connect you then it disconnects you. The belief system of the Ancient Egyptians resonated with Truth and, therefore, it connected them with Truth.

And the more an individual delved into and became immersed in the practice of their religion philosophy, the more steeped that individual became in Hermetic thought, the more his or her consciousness was opened and expanded, shifted and changed, the more removed he or she became from the ordinary masses.

But should we desire it, and pursue it, so, too, could it be for us today.

Initiation and the Divine Gnosis

We disregard the concept of initiation because we tend to regard it as the product of an ancient belief system that has no relevance to or bearing on us today. Plus, we've pigeon-holed it as a 'spiritual' practice undertaken by those who are thus inclined.

Initiation doesn't have to be undertaken in the context and the confines of an ancient temple, and, in my opinion and experience, it cannot be undertaken in or as part of the institutionalised religious systems we have around us today.

Initiation can come from directly within, especially if it's triggered and awakened by a Hermetic Process, and it can be undertaken anywhere, even in the context of modern society, which is exactly why I devoted a whole monograph to it (see Monograph Sixteen).

And it can be triggered in those capable, any time, without the conscious permission of the conscious awareness, although, as I said in Monograph Sixteen, the conscious awareness must participate consciously.

Internal initiation (as opposed to the external initiation offered by the temples and priesthoods of the ancient world) begins with the preparation of consciousness to receive, absorb and assimilate higher Knowledge (transformation), like the tilling of soil, and this is then followed by the inner connection with and attainment of divine gnosis.

The kind of Knowledge, obtained externally and arrived at internally during initiation (Processes of mastery), raises, opens and expands consciousness. It powerfully and profoundly changes thought, belief, mindset, perspective and focus, and it extends the boundaries of one's personal internal horizons. All of which have a significant impact on one's reality.

But initiation is not easy, at all. So it is not for the faint-hearted or the weak willed.

Connecting with the Divine Gnosis without Preparation

The divine gnosis held by the ancient priesthoods could potentially crack the untrained, unprepared psyche and precipitate psychosis, regardless of the state of the cultural consciousness from which the individual came, so how much more so when chronic ignorance and Separation from the divine gnosis form the bedrock of cultural consciousness, as is the case now?

Again, this is why taking drugs as a short cut to 'enlightenment' is such a highly dangerous undertaking, especially now, in this modern era. How much more damaging is it, too, when individuals take drugs for recreational reasons without having any idea at all of the potential effects on their consciousness?

Stumbling Around in the Dark

In this, the modern era, there is not a whole lot on offer for any individual seeking a higher state of consciousness, which is why so many resort to drugs. Eastern philosophies like Buddhism and Hinduism do, for some, offer pathways to higher states of consciousness, but these do not easily harmonise and fuse with the mindsets and systems of beliefs that underpin Western society.

And initiation itself, regardless of how it's undertaken, clashes, collides with, contradicts and conflicts with the materialism and the materialistic pursuits and mindsets of modern society, particularly those of the western cultures.

Robert S. De Ropp provides a number of specific and good examples of the tailspin of psychological trouble and trauma this can result in¹¹. And in the Hermetica Thoth speaks very specifically about this, too:-

*“. . . for the possessions of this life are too pleasant, and such pleasures grip the soul by the throat, holding it down to earth.”*⁹

So people are pretty much on their own, invariably stumbling around in the dark . . . Or should that be Dark?

Which is exactly why we need Osiris, the higher, or metaphysical, principle of good governance, to return. We need Osiris to 'turn the lights (Light) back on'.

The Ancient Egyptian Myth of Osiris and Isis

Since I'll be talking about the myth of Osiris and Isis in some detail, for those unfamiliar with it I need to lay it out in a full, albeit slightly-abridged, form. So bear with me. It's a good story, and its importance to us will become clear.

Osiris, Isis, Set and Nephthys, brothers and sisters (same dimensional origin), descended to earth from the celestial spheres (higher dimensions) to help and guide humanity.

Osiris civilised the people, teaching them many things – mathematics, astronomy and our connection with the stars, writing and how to keep records, how to build with (megalithic) stone, healing, the cultivation of crops. He introduced civilising laws, and he benevolently ruled over the land and the people as king with his sister, Isis, as his queen.

But Osiris's brother, Set, was jealous. He coveted Osiris's rule. So he plotted to kill Osiris and usurp the throne. He invited Osiris to a party and at one point produced a beautiful coffer made of cedar, inlaid with ebony and ivory, which he'd secretly had made to Osiris's exact specifications, promising to gift the coffer to whomever of his guests fitted it exactly.

Every attendee at the party, all co-conspirators, 72 of them, tried the coffer, but only Osiris fitted it perfectly, as was the plan. As soon as he got into the coffer, Set and his co-conspirators slammed the lid on the coffer and nailed it shut, even sealing it with pitch. They then threw the coffer into the Nile.

Isis, mourning her husband, found the coffer, retrieved it and hid it. But Set discovered its location. He opened the coffer and dismembered Osiris's body, scattering the body parts across the land.

Again, Isis intervened. She travelled the land with her sister, Nephthys, locating each body part except one, the phallus. She brought the parts back together, bound them in strips of linen (the first mummy), and then, using her words, including the secret name of Ra (the sun), which she tricked out of him, and a fashioned phallus, she magically brought Osiris's soul back into the mummified body.

But only temporarily. Only long enough to copulate with him and conceive a son, Horus. Then she went into exile, hiding in the reeds and bulrushes along the Nile where she birthed, suckled and raised Horus.

As a man, Horus challenged his uncle, Set. They fought many times, and Horus underwent many trials during this process that served only to make him stronger. During one such fight with Set, he lost an eye, but it was eventually returned to him by Thoth, the god of the written records of Knowledge.

Horus finally defeated his uncle and reclaimed his birthright, ruling the land as king.

Such is the form of the myth as we've inherited it.

A Few Important Considerations

There are a few important things to consider in our interpretation of the myth.

First, myths like this one were designed to encode higher Knowledge to preserve it, but they were also, at the same time, designed to conceal that Knowledge to all but those who held the key to deciphering it. The divine Knowledge, higher Knowledge, was never for the public consumption of the uninitiated masses.

Second, the myth has predominantly come to us through the Hellenizing filter of the Greeks, which had the unfortunate effect of 'flattening' everything, or removing the subtle nuances of dimensionality and meaning, as Thoth knew.

Third, the interpretation of it has also come to us through the filter of our ability, or lack thereof, to fully and coherently decipher hieroglyphics, a writing system that we are not fully capable of understanding, in my opinion, because it is so different from our own.

Our writing system is uni-dimensional, or flat, designed for the separated conscious intellect, which, in turn, renders us left-brain dominant. Hieroglyphics, as a writing system, is exactly the opposite. It works in conjunction, and, therefore, in sync, with deeper consciousness, and it is multi-dimensional, constructed in layers that determine the symbolic meanings of the hieroglyphic symbols.

It is a system of writing that requires a developed intuition, not to mention balance of the left and right hemispheres of the brain, and never more so than with the spells, incantations, and verses of the religion-philosophy.

The Osirian Myth Decoded

Despite these considerations, enough of the myth is intact to allow for an understanding of what the ancients wanted to convey.

Osiris:

When we know that Osiris is the higher, or purely metaphysical, principle of the good governance that is our rightful heritage, our birthright, and Isis, as his queen, is the good guidance that is always the consort of good governance, decoding the myth is rendered a whole lot easier.

Osiris and Isis, and, also, Set, are not clichéd gods to be worshipped, although they became so. As metaphysical principles, they should be honoured, and applied.

As metaphysical principles Osiris and Isis are directly concerned with the higher nature and order of consciousness, and with consciousness as a higher concept, and with the regulation of it at the highest levels of awareness and understanding.

So the Osirian good governance is as applicable individually as it is culturally and collectively. Meaning, whilst the optimum is to have it implemented culturally so that it permeates every individual consciousness in that culture, it can still be honoured and implemented personally.

At a cultural level Osirian rule forms a Hermetic (alchemical, energetic) fabric of society that potentially (Free Will determines the actuality) benefits all and every member.

At an individual level, for anyone who honours Osirian rule, the individual consciousness is honoured, not just the higher aspect, although this is an essential component of Osirian governance, but as a whole – the iceberg in its entirety – what's underneath and above the waterline of physical awareness.

Osiris was not, and isn't, the highest ideal for which we can strive. He is the environment, culture and state of being within which we are fully able to reach for and attain our highest ideal. He is the Great Facilitator, the fertile soil into which, as consciousness, we are nurtured and nourished, and within which we thrive.

Thus, as a metaphysical principle, while Osirian governance can be established and implemented as an external construct, forming the premise of a culture and society, it is also an internal construct. So even in the absence of Osirian rule around us, we are still able to honour it within ourselves (as Hermeticists do).

Isis:

Isis mourned her husband because without his good governance of consciousness the higher guidance of the Ancient Wisdom and the divine gnosis is limited in its ability to Work its magic. What use the most nourishing fertiliser without good soil for it to work with and through?

Whilst Osirian rule can be external and internal, the guidance of Isis just is, but it, too, can be accessed externally or internally. For both principles, honouring Osirian rule and accessing the Wisdom of Isis internally requires higher Hermetic states of being.

Set:

Set (source of the Christian Satan), is the principle of purely metaphysical bad governance that exploits the nature of consciousness for its own ends, using and abusing us in the process, establishing an environment, a culture and a state of being that serves only itself, trapping, wounding and harming consciousness in the process.

Set always conspires to kill off good governance because the two are mutually exclusive. Either one reigns or the other does, never both. So where even a semblance of good governance reigns, bad governance will struggle to get a foothold.

The Coffin of Containment:

The coffin symbolises one of the two most powerful ways Set kills off good governance, but usually both mechanisms for killing it off are required, which the myth makes clear. Containment is essential if Set is to rule.

But what is contained, and what is the mechanism of containment? What is contained is the higher aspect of consciousness, the spark of divinity, that lies at the heart of every consciousness, and also anything that can potentially bring it forth from containment, whether Knowledge, Wisdom, or Hermetic devices that harness and apply higher energetic principles.

As for the mechanisms of containment, we have brilliant examples of them around us now, from the institutionalised religions that trap and contain thought and belief, to the chronic ignorance that stagnates Process, to the mechanisms of manipulation that ensnare focus and keep us shallow.

Once the containment is in place, Set is able to use physicality itself to perpetuate the containment, and this kind of containment prevents the resurrection of Osirian governance. Once he's locked out, Osiris cannot come back without Isis.

Dismemberment:

The other essential means of killing off the good governance of Osiris is Separation, specifically, the separation/Separation of consciousness, which is why Set didn't just dismember Osiris's body, he made damn sure the parts were taken to different and separate locations so they could not be put back together.

This is incredibly vital, and it is well worth noting. The Separation of consciousness, symbolised by the separation of Osiris in the myth, is Separation from Osiris, and without all the parts, Osiris cannot return fully and permanently, which is why one body part, a pretty important one, is missing in the myth. Without it Isis could not bring Osiris back permanently, which is why she conceived of the Horus rule, a lower form of Osirian rule.

Set's Co-conspirators:

We are Set's co-conspirators, courtesy of Free Will. We are always culpable when bad governance reigns, because it cannot do so without us. We give it a foothold. Set does the rest, implementing and establishing mechanisms and systems that perpetuate his rule.

Usually, on an individual level, we are lured, seduced, sometimes tricked but sometimes not, by the offer of something we want. The myth does not go into detail, because it doesn't have to. We know the drill. No doubt the co-conspirators were offered positions of power in the new regime, or wealth, or some other form of egoic aggrandisement.

And then, with such an offer, how easily we betray all that is good, and how easily we choose and act in ways we know are bad. Murder, in any code or belief system, is always a golden no-no. This we know because we are in possession of a conscience. It's actually a part of our consciousness, and if we ignore it, it diminishes to the point of becoming non-existent within us, another of the separations.

The Number 72:

The number 72 given specifically as the number of Set's co-conspirators is a vital piece of the information encoded into the myth, and it's why I noted it in my recounting.

72 is an extremely significant number, one that is instantly recognisable by those of us who are familiar with the cycle of precession and its associated numerology.

In fact, 72 points directly to the great cosmic clock of precession because it forms the very tick of the clock, like the ticking of a normal clock². 72 is the number of years required for the sun to move 1 degree around the precessional clock², so encoding it into the myth is like pointing to the second hand on a watch.

Why would the myth incorporate the precessional cycle and the cosmic clock in such a way that it can neither be missed nor ignored, thereby pointing us directly to it?

I believe the myth is deliberately linking the cosmic precessional clock with the karmic pattern encoded in the myth, a pattern that plays out in the human experience like our proverbial needle stuck on its broken record, one that had its inception in a very old iteration of human existence and is compounded again and again and again, by us, every time we don't resolve it but, instead, allow it to hold sway and determine the very course, and the end, of each iteration.

Put another way, the myth doesn't just encode the cycle of precession, it vitally links the precessional clock with us as co-conspirators.

The Karmic Pattern Encoded in the Myth:

Myths can always be interpreted in levels, which is the beauty of them. So, on one level, the myth doesn't encode an event, literally or figuratively, although, also, on another level, it does (I will discuss this in another monograph).

At the level I'm approaching it in this monograph, the myth encodes a pattern, a karmic pattern, one that is repeated over and over in the iterations of the human experience, but one that is, too, repeated again and again in this, our current iteration.

Whenever good governance, our rightful heritage, reigns over us benevolently, guiding, protecting, nurturing, nourishing, bad governance usurps control, by foul means, never fair, with help from us as co-conspirators.

Whenever and wherever good governance is restored, it is never with the help of humanity. Free Will is always the means by which we, as co-conspirators, are used by the principle of bad governance to assume control, and Free Will also renders humanity wholly incapable of defeating bad governance and re-establishing good governance.

The Eye of Horus:

There are so many different interpretations of this. Really, you can pick and choose whichever suits you. My own interpretation is it symbolises perspective. More specifically, it symbolises whatever it is that forms the premise of perspective.

The Eye of Horus, as with most talismanic symbols, can be used to symbolise evil, the Dark rule of Set, or it can be used to symbolise Light, or good (restored vision).

Those who serve Set use the Eye of Horus to symbolise the manipulation of humanity into a perspective that is purely physical, or material, and, therefore, chronically ignorant. So, as evil, it symbolises Separation and illusion. I know, to them, the right and left eyes each have different meaning. No doubt one, probably the right, symbolises higher perspective while the other, the left, symbolises the ignorant lower perspective, or vice versa.

Thus, when certain celebrities carry on with their antics of covering up one eye with a patch or a hand, they are arrogantly telling you they know more than you. And they are telling you and each other what they serve. Really, what they're telling you is they are owned because they've been bought, like Set's co-conspirators, and they are perpetuating the Set governance under which we are labouring, and suffering.

For Horus, his one-eyed perspective was restored by Thoth who symbolises (Hermetic) Knowledge and writing, or the written record of transforming, transcendent Knowledge. Beautifully said. And so true. Perspective is always restored by Knowledge. Always.

The Difference Between Horus and Osiris

Despite the fact that Horus is a reincarnated form of Osiris, there is a profound difference between the Osirian and Horus forms of good governance. The myth encapsulates that difference perfectly with the lengthy battle and multiple fights between Set and Horus.

Set and Osiris cannot and do not fight because, as metaphysical principles, their fight will and must take place on the metaphysical plane where Set is wholly incapable of defeating Osiris.

Do you remember in Monograph Fifteen I said to fight the face of the Set tyranny that currently governs human reality we must take that fight to the metaphysical plane? As Horus demonstrates, fighting Set on the physical plane is never a good idea, although, potentially, as he also demonstrates, it can be done.

The reason Horus is far less powerful than his father is because physicality itself is Set's greatest tool, one he wields like a weapon. In the myth, Horus had a lot of help, and not just from Isis and Thoth, without which he would not have prevailed.

The difference between the Osirian and Horus forms of governance is also the reason why the pharaohs of Ancient Egypt were associated with Horus, and why, at death, they became associated with Osiris.

Such is the state of human consciousness here, in this realm, that it takes death to be reunited with Osiris, depending, of course, on how we've travelled through our lives.

The Horus Form of Good Governance

To explain the difference between the two it's easier to start with Horus.

Like any physical incarnation, he symbolises a lower-dimensional form of the good governance, one that is established, implemented and maintained on the physical plane through the auspices of laws, statutes and commandments, like the Ten Commandments, rites and rituals, and the establishment of a belief system, like a religion, presided over by the king himself (or authority) in conjunction with the priesthood.

Although physical in its rule, it can still be accompanied and assisted by Isis, and it can hold Osirian echoes, but how much so depends on the regulating authorities. The accompaniment of this guidance, itself purely metaphysical, means the Horus rule of good governance is still potentially powerful in its protection of the people it rules over, and in its establishment of a culture within which consciousness benefits and is cared for.

Does belief in the Christian god and the adherence to his rules, dictates, edicts and commandments constitute Osirian rule? No, absolutely not. But if this god's religious rules are authentically, not hypocritically, applied, Christianity can constitute a Horus form of rule. Souls are still afforded a form of protection, if not nurture, so long as the Horus authority remains steadfast and authentic in its care of those under its rule.

The problem with the Horus rule of Christianity (and Judaism and Islam), as with any Horus form of rule, is its vulnerability to abuse, exploitation and corruption.

The Weakness of the Horus Rule

Because its source, its origin, and, therefore, its implementation is the physical, rather than the metaphysical, plane, the Horus rule is vulnerable to many things, like corruption, that weaken it, and this is depicted in the myth in the form of the many trials and tests (seductions) Horus had to overcome to be truly strong enough to defeat Set.

That the Horus rule must be established and maintained on the physical plane inherently requires effort, vigilance, determined dedication, application, discipline, and a sharp, honed, unwavering focus. As such, it is vulnerable to apathy, laziness, distractions, seductions, corruption, abuse, a lack of vigilance, and a split focus.

The Ancient Egyptians themselves personify the truth of the potentiality of strength and weakness in the Horus rule. Overall, their civilisation endured for a remarkably long period of time, and at its heights was a superpower in the region. On the other hand, there were times when it was overrun and conquered, and when it was weakened by a weak or corrupt pharaoh, a corrupt priesthood, or internal schisms between the ruling authorities.

Although we can't possibly know because we are not privy to the inner workings of each and every pharaoh, I would wager money on the fact that under the rule of those pharaohs who authentically honoured the Horus rule, possibly like Ramses II (the Great), Egypt thrived and was strong, whilst under the rule of those pharaohs who did not authentically honour the governance, Egypt was weakened. Perhaps the consequences of that weakness were not seen immediately, during that pharaoh's reign, but they would have become manifest not long afterwards.

The Osirian Form of Good Governance

The Osirian form of good governance is truly powerful and incorruptible because it is purely metaphysical in its source, its origin, its implementation, and its maintenance, which is why Set had to kill Osiris.

Using language and words to articulate an Osirian culture is difficult because, being purely metaphysical, the physicality of our writing system will be inadequate as a means of description, and so it is.

In layman's terms, such a culture, and the whole fabric of its society, is geared to honour consciousness, especially the higher aspect of it, not the ego, by directly influencing consciousness Hermetically (magically, alchemically, energetically).

Osirian governance is self-perpetuating, but so, too, is the bad governance of Set. As such, while Osirian rule provides the soil within which consciousness is healthy and flourishing, a healthy, flourishing consciousness naturally upholds the Osirian rule.

Unfortunately, the same can be said for the rule of Set. It provides a self-aggrandising culture within which consciousness is consumed by a focus on material things that do not serve it, so it becomes damaged and wounded, causing it to devolve, which, in turn, perpetuates the bad rule, as we can see around us today.

The Osirian Golden Age of Existence

The Ancient Egyptians as we know them practiced the Horus form of governance, but the pyramid culture of pre-dynastic Egypt, or Khem, practiced an Osirian form of governance.

Under the Horus rule, the king and the priesthood, as the regulating authorities, form the connection with divinity, so the people rely on them to maintain that connection, and initiation is reserved for them, not as a rule but as a construct of the society.

Under the Osirian rule, every individual is the connection to divinity and every individual is connected, and initiation is just something every incarnate soul engages with as a natural and normal function of that society. These societies are not necessarily utopian, either. There are still disasters experienced, fears confronted, wounds that require healing, conflicts to resolve, and there is also fun to be had.

But the Osirian rule is always associated with a golden age of human existence.

The Karmic Pattern Repeated Over and Over Again

Looking back across time, back over as much of this iteration as is possible, we can see the karmic pattern the myth encodes played out again and again, at different times, in different contexts, and in different cultures.

Osiris, or a form of him, appears, only to have Set act to kill him off, contain him, sometimes crushing the culture, and, with it, the threat to Set's rule.

The Celts are a classic example of this pattern. They practiced a beautiful form of Osirian rule, but the Romans, and particularly Julius Caesar, as an instrument of Set, crushed the Celtic culture, relentlessly, implacably. He murdered millions of them in Gaul (France), and imprisoned millions more, and then went after them in Britannia.

Furthermore, as with the Osirian myth, the Celtic Wisdom endured, as Isis did. In fact, the druidic Wisdom became infused with Christianity, forming a beautiful Celtic version of it, and the Catholic Church found it necessary to act ruthlessly to eradicate it.

We also see the same pattern played out with the Cathars. Again, we see a form of Osirian rule that caused the cultural consciousness of southern France to thrive under the Cathars. And again, we see Set and his co-conspirators act quickly to kill off and contain the Osirian rule, crushing the culture, snuffing it out until it was completely extinguished.

The Cultures of Central America and the Gods of the Past

When evolved beings from a higher cultural consciousness appear in cultures that could fairly be described as primitive, and these evolved people teach those more primitive cultures many things of higher and lower knowledge, it is perhaps natural that the more primitive cultures would turn the evolved beings into gods, and especially so with the passing of time.

So it was with Quetzalcoatl, Kukulcan and Viracocha, the gods (or same god) of the Aztecs, the Maya and the Inca respectively¹. The myths and legends of these gods, passed down orally across aeons of time, all tell remarkably similar stories of men with remarkably similar characteristics who appeared some time in the pre-history of that region¹, bringing with them an Osirian form of rule, ushering in a golden age of existence.

In many ways they were gods, these evolved people, bringing with them transformative Knowledge. Like Osiris, they were civilisers who introduced organised society and civilising laws, a knowledge of writing, healing, mathematics, astronomy, the planting and cultivating of crops, engineering and architecture and building with stone, and the Knowledge of the celestial spheres, hence the Central American pyramids.

Feathered Serpents

Perhaps the biggest clue left to us by the Central and South American myths and legends as to who and what these evolved beings were is the interpretation of their names, all of which translate into the title Feathered Serpent¹.

The Feathered Serpent represents the transcended state of being of one who exists beyond physicality despite being in or having physical form. The Feathered Serpent is one whose consciousness and, therefore, mindset, perspective, belief and focus are no longer bound to the quagmire of the physical, pulled down by the heavy gravitational pull of materiality, just as you would expect someone from a high cultural consciousness to be.

The Feathered Serpent forms the same symbolism as does the caterpillar that is transformed into the butterfly, but I love the symbolism these evolved people introduced to depict something so powerful, because the serpent itself is a powerful symbol of Wisdom, and the feathers symbolise the freedom from gravitational materiality afforded by the Wisdom.

That Quetzalcoatl, Kukulcan and Viracocha (and others of the various pantheons of Central American gods) were said to be tall, bearded, pale-skinned, blue-eyed men is very probably because they were genetically part of the high culture that survived the end of the old and the beginning of the new human iteration¹ – the seeds of a new iteration (the allele for blue eyes is a highly significant genetic marker for an ability to hold 'higher' energy and to achieve higher states of consciousness).

Set Usurped the Osirian Rule in Central America

But Set did what he does best. He killed off the Osirian rule in that region. Something either went horribly wrong in the interpretation, the understanding, and the practice and application of it or something caused the cultures to revert to their primitive ways. Or perhaps both.

I believe there was a kind of innocence, or maybe a naivety, and, dare I say it, a genetically inferior intellect, in the cultures of that region that made them vulnerable to the trickery, and the lure and seduction of corruption.

The twisted interpretation of the divine gnosis as evidenced by the ritual blood sacrifices did not happen by chance, nor by the 'Chinese whispers' dynamic of a changed message. What made them vulnerable was fear, and something, or someone, played on that fear, because fear formed the premise of the ritual sacrifices of the Aztecs, the Maya and other peoples of that region.

Regardless of the justification for it, bad governance reigns supreme when a culture commits murder in such a systematic way as the Aztecs did, and when they actively seek human victims for their blood (heart) sacrifices.

The systematic ritualised murder and blood sacrifice, and the wearing of the sacrificial victims' skins by the high priest, was the system put in place to ensure bad governance did reign supreme, and it was a darkly magical practice that was always going to come back on the cultures that practiced it.

Ironically, they sacrificed the way they did to prevent their own destruction from higher forces, but what they were doing was bringing destruction upon themselves from those same higher forces manifested on the physical plane.

A Systematic Recipe for Destruction

The Maya, for all their Knowledge of the celestial spheres, and the movements and cycles that govern us, were wiped out, very possibly by a severe drought that they themselves exacerbated by using and, therefore, depriving themselves of their own soil to produce the white clay for their monuments.

And the Aztecs, as we know, were destroyed by the Spanish invaders, violently, not just courtesy of the Spanish sword but also courtesy of the germs the Spanish brought with them – germs that decimated the Aztec population.

In fact, the Spanish felt they were entirely justified in committing genocide when they witnessed the ritual sacrifices of the Aztecs. Oh, the irony. Or, rather, the hypocrisy. The Spanish sacrificed anyone and everyone who did not adhere to Catholicism during their infamous Inquisition.

The destruction of these two cultures aptly illustrates and typifies a vital and fundamental aspect of Set's rule (which he never discloses): it always culminates in destruction, particularly self-destruction. Always, without fail and without exception.

Again, to reiterate, this is why the Osirian myth links us, as co-conspirators, with the cycle of precession that governs the timing of the iterations of human existence. We are a primary contributing factor in the end, the destruction, of our iterations. Is that not reason enough to hide our own history from us on the part of those who serve Set?

The Khmer Culture of Asia

I happened to see a documentary on the ancient Khmer culture that thrived in modern Cambodia and Myanmar from 802 – 1431 CE (I've tried to find it again without success so cannot reference it, which is a pity because it was very good). Again, it was impossible for me to miss the same pattern.

The culture was established under a strong warrior-priest, Jayavarman II, who united the bickering, squabbling petty kingdoms under one rule and by a fabric weaved of an enlightened form of Hinduism. As a cohesive whole, the culture rose to great heights, with a sophisticated administrative system based on 23 provinces⁸ and a commerce that seemed to be predominantly in the hands of women⁸ (the culture was not misogynist).

The culture was able to build great cities comparable in size to those we inhabit today, with a clever system of reservoirs, waterways and canals, roads, and, of course, the incredibly-beautiful temples that still exist today, now being reclaimed from the forest, studied and analysed.

One of their temples, Angkor Wat, is the largest religious temple ever built, not to mention one of the most exquisite, and it was a microcosm of the Hindu universe⁸, which, to me, strongly resonates with a knowledge of Osirian good governance, using the divine gnosis to harness the power of our connection with the celestial spheres for the good of all.

As does the fact that, like the pyramids in Egypt, their temples form a whole that mirrors the constellation of Draco as it would have appeared in 10,500 BCE¹, the same time pointed at with the sky-ground reflection of the Giza pyramids and the Belt of Orion⁵.

One of the beautiful carvings on one of their temples depicts the infernal tug of war between the forces of Light and the forces of Darkness, so they were, indeed, enlightened.

And then, yet another over-bloated ego, tools of Set, ascended the throne somewhere around 1330ish, and he upset the balance. He overturned the religion that had served the culture so well for so long and introduced a darkly-magical form of Buddhism, complete with the blood-letting (not sacrifice) we see in the cultures of Central America.

Within a hundred years of this divisive move, the culture was in conflict within itself, which weakened it internally, making it vulnerable to attack and invasion. As a culture, it imploded, and its decline was rapid. Its beautiful temples and its vast cities were abandoned, claimed by the forest.

Excellent Conduits

As this particular king and so many other over-bloated egos illustrate, men make excellent conduits for bad governance whilst women make excellent conduits for good guidance.

Sweep your eyes back over our history and see if you can argue that point. Why else do you think the Darkness Works so damned hard to suppress women?

Any and every culture, like the Romans and their Catholic Church, who honour the rule of Set suppresses women. Just as separation/Separation, containment and entrapment are recurring themes in these cultures, so, too, is the suppression of women a recurring theme. By their fruit shall ye know them

The Principle of Isis

The Knowledge encoded in the Osirian myth gets a whole lot more interesting when you delve a little deeper into the metaphysical dynamics of Osiris and Isis and their effect on the human experience.

Whilst good governance comes and goes in this dimension, or, rather, is established, or re-established, and then killed off and locked out by Set – the eternal and infernal tug of war between the Light and Dark as depicted in the Khmer temple – the good guidance of Isis never leaves this dimension, just as Isis herself never left, or died, in the myth.

Because she never leaves, she is always capable of bringing Osiris back. This, the Darkness knows, which is why it crushes the Wisdom of Isis wherever it appears. The Darkness knows the inherent danger of, and is fully cognisant of, the threat of her. Indeed, it is hyper-vigilant where she is concerned, as well it should be.

The Ancient Wisdom and the Guardians

The Ancient Wisdom I have written about extensively is the good guidance of Isis, our inherent birthright. And it is the very substance, or essence, of the Guardians. As such, you can see the inherent characteristics of the good guidance in those of the Guardians I have referred to, specifically Socrates, Gautama Buddha and Yeheshua.

Like a flame on a candle, the Wisdom radiates, although, in exile, its Light is seemingly dim. As a radiation it never forces itself on humanity, unlike Set's bad governance. It never pushes its way in, or demands it be heard, heeded, recognised and honoured, even if honouring it is entirely in our best interests.

Furthermore, just as Isis's associated star, Sirius, is the guidance and companionship for human consciousness as a whole, or a collective, so, too, is it with the Guardians when they come in their True Form*.

As such, they don't Work with consciousness at an individual level, although what they do is always for the good of all individual souls.

In re-seeding the Wisdom they direct and guide the whole thing, so they don't and cannot become entangled in the grass roots of individual lives, which is why they traditionally Worked with disciples who did, then, take the Wisdom to the people.

They are not counsellors, in other words. Actually, they make very bad counsellors because Free Will is an alien thing to them.

The Power of Isis

If you remember that Isis is the consort of Osirian good governance then you can see this in the essence, or energy, of the Guardians. Innate in their energy is the Wisdom that magically, or Hermetically, brings back the Osirian rule. So it was with each of them in their own unique way, and the Osirian rule took the form of Philosophy (Socrates), Buddhism (Gautama Buddha) and Gnosticism (Yeheshua).

Furthermore, just as Isis could not be killed or snuffed out by Set – indeed, in some versions of the myth he tries to marry her – neither has the Wisdom of these three Guardians ever truly or fully been snuffed out, despite the best efforts of some to do so.

But just as Isis was forced into exile, so, too, has the Ancient Wisdom been forced into exile by the bad governance that reigns here now. Even in exile, though, Isis still Worked for the good of all, teaching her son, raising him to be strong enough to challenge his uncle, which effectively, eventually, spelled the end of Set's rule.

So, too, is it with the Wisdom here now. It is Working, behind the scenes, so to speak, patiently awaiting the time when it will, once again, come out of exile.

Isis's conception of rule in the form of Horus is a threat to Set's rule, but nothing is a greater threat to Set than Osiris himself. In fact, he greatly fears Osiris's return.

The Rose of Human Consciousness

There is another extremely important aspect of the Osirian mythology that has a direct bearing on human consciousness. The only way the Osirian form of good governance can be re-established here in its full and original form is if all the parts, or facets, of human consciousness are brought back together, healed and whole.

I speak about the conscious awareness, the subconscious, higher consciousness and the imagination as dimensional aspects of human consciousness, but the Truth is human consciousness is far more multi-dimensional even than this. Higher consciousness alone is far more multi-dimensional.

In Hermetic tradition, consciousness is symbolised by the rose, and a beautiful symbolic link it is, too. Just as each petal comprises the whole rose, so, too, does each facet of consciousness comprise the whole. And just as the rose has an inner centre formed of an intricate collection of petals, so, too, does consciousness have an inner centre formed of an intricate collection of dimensional facets, one that is uniquely different for each of us.

Linen Bandages and Magical Words

The importance, the significance, and the powerful ramifications for humanity of bringing back and reassembling the dimensional facets of consciousness is the reason why Set dismembered Osiris in the myth, and why he took the body parts to separate parts of the land so they could not be reassembled.

And it is the same reason why, for those perpetrating the bad governance that reigns today, it is of vital importance that human consciousness remain separated and Separated. It is why Separation is such a recurring theme of the Darkness. They separate/Separate us any which way, and every which way they can.

When human consciousness is re-membered, reassembled, healed and whole, Osirian good governance begins to return, naturally, because it is, in Truth, not only our birthright, it is our natural way of being.

Knowledge, especially in the form of the divine gnosis, is the mummifying bandages Isis used to bind Osiris's body parts back together into a whole, and the Ancient Wisdom is Isis's magical words that can and will bring him back into this realm.

Higher Knowledge is not just an antidote for dumbness, it is an antidote for Separation. But if Knowledge is an antidote, the Ancient Wisdom is the powerfully magical (Hermetic), all-encompassing cure.

The Ancient Egyptian Mythology of Zep Tepi

Ancient Egyptian mythology speaks of Zep Tepi, a 'First Time'^{1, 2, 4, 6}, that was known to be a golden age of human existence. And because they had their roots in Ancient Egypt, this particular myth has morphed into the Christian and Jewish myths we have today of the Garden of Eden – a paradisaical place where humans walked in communion with God.

Many people think the Ancient Egyptians believed Zep Tepi was a golden age experienced deep in the pre-history of this, our current interation^{1, 2, 4, 6}. I don't dispute either the theory that Zep Tepi did occur in Egypt's pre-history or that ordinary Ancient Egyptians believed it did.

There was a high culture that existed in the region of Egypt at the end of the last iteration and the beginning of the current one, and it would, indeed, have been a golden age of existence, especially when compared to ours.

But Zep Tepi refers to far more than just the beginning of our iteration and the high culture, the ascended consciousness, that existed at that time.

We all, each and every one of us here now, came from our own Zep Tepi, a paradisaical 'first time' when we existed in complete union with the divine. And we all fell out of that union, not just into lower dimensionality, not just into the quagmire of materiality, but also into a Perpetually Separated, zombie state of existence. We are all just about as low as we can get as sentient beings.

So, too, is this true for us as a collective. As a whole, humanity once existed in complete union with divinity, ruled by Osirian good governance. Like the Garden of Eden, it was paradisaical and it was our birthright, our intended state of being, so it was, indeed, a golden age of existence – a golden age like no other we've experienced since.

And then along came a spider . . . a highly seductive, supremely manipulative spider.

Cast Out of Paradise

The biblical Garden of Eden story would have us believe the fall of humanity happened in a single incident when the woman, Eve, was persuaded by the serpent to partake of the apple of Knowledge, and then persuaded the man, Adam, to do the same (which holds Truth, hence the Dark obsession with suppressing the Sacred Feminine).

The Garden of Eden is a clever twist and distortion of Truth. I have to give them that. In one fell swoop they've maligned the Sacred Feminine, blaming the fall of humanity and man on women and facilitating any justification for the suppression of them. And they've poisoned the human mindset, causing humans to believe Knowledge is evil when the Truth is the exact opposite. It is the Separation from Knowledge that perpetuates evil.

And they would have us believe the very god who Created us turfed us out of the Garden where we existed in paradisaical union with him, as punishment, when the Truth is our Creators never expelled us. 'Twas simply not in their True Nature to do so, unlike the god of the story who behaved like a sulky, dictatorial bully when he wasn't obeyed. Such behaviour is egoic, not truly divine.

We took ourselves out of paradisaical union because we were manipulated, lured, tricked and seduced by what was on offer, just as Set's co-conspirators were seduced into committing murder and high treason, and because we exercised our Free Will. We left our divine source, but it has never abandoned us.

Our Fall From Grace

The fall of humanity was a Process that occurred over time and over many iterations of the human experience, or, rather, in just about every iteration of the human experience. As consciousness, we return to Osirian rule, then we fall out of his rule, and then we return again only to fall again.

As I said earlier, and as the Osirian myth tells us, this is not just because consciousness is governed by the ascending/descending cycle of Orion. It is because we are subject to a karmic pattern that was set aeons ago within us and has been perpetuated and, therefore, empowered ever since. But it is a karmic pattern that is not independent of the cycle of Orion, which is why I believe the myth points to the clock of precession.

If we just focus on this current iteration, our iteration, for now, we existed in a state of Zep Tepi very early on. But we can't see it because we have no real Knowledge of it. The myths and monuments of the ancient world hold its essence, its resonance, but these are rendered almost completely ineffective courtesy of our chronic ignorance.

Initiation as the Bedrock of the Pyramid High Culture

Far from representing the dismemberment of Osiris, the Hermetic configuration formed of the pyramids brought all the parts of consciousness back together into one cohesive whole. And, although I cannot prove it, I believe each pyramid is linked with and harnesses the energy of different and specific stars, not just in Orion.

From lower to higher, the configuration took individuals through the stages of initiation, and not just the priests and priestesses of the priesthood but all the individuals in that culture. Every level and every state of being was catered for. Thus did initiation form the bedrock of that culture.

As I said in the last monograph, Egypt, in its entirety, was a temple. No wonder the ancients believed it was Zep Tepi.

The Devolution of the Ancient Egyptians

The question is how did the high culture of the pyramid builders devolve into the lower culture of the Ancient Egyptians as we know them?

Was it just the natural descent of consciousness as regulated by Orion? Or did Set act to contain it, as is always the case?

If I was a betting person, I would wager a decent amount of money on the fact that it was the latter of these two possibilities, especially given the fact that at the time, human consciousness was in balance in terms of ascent and descent.

Has the Darkness Hermetically manipulated a blind spot, a wall beyond which we cannot see? It would seem so.

The very valid point has been raised that in Britain, Egypt and Central America there seems to be the beginning of a new age at the same time⁴. The Mayan Age of the Jaguar began in 3114 BCE, Stonehenge was first begun around 3100 BCE, and the civilisation of Ancient Egypt began under Menes in 3100 BCE⁴. So what happened at this time?

Or perhaps we should be asking what happened before it? What did Set do to contain and kill off the Osirian cultures of our pre-history, the same cultures that built the pyramids in different locations around the world? How did the ancient cultures of Egypt become Horus rules rather than Osirian rules?

The Resurrection of Human Consciousness

Human consciousness yearns to return to that original union with the divine, even though most of us are completely unaware of this yearning. Many more of us are aware, though. And, for anyone who's experienced the trigger experience I wrote about in the previous monographs, that yearning is awakened and you become aware of it. It's painful.

But everything in this reality, especially now, is conspiring to keep us separated and Separated. That's the problem with the rule of Set, the rule the Dark priests and those who serve them are perpetrating and perpetuating. They need to keep us as co-conspirators.

When the bad governance replaces the good, very bad things happen. When the bad governance reigns, we are seduced and manipulated into doing very bad things, just as we are now being manipulated, and these always come back on us karmically.

Although we cannot avoid or circumvent our own karmic patterns, the time has come to change the status quo, and that time is marked in the celestial spheres, which is exactly what the ancients were trying to tell us^{2, 4, 5, 6}.

Only, this time, we're not going to re-establish the Horus rule. Isis and her Ancient Wisdom are coming out of exile. She is going to deliver up to the Darkness that which it fears most. She is going to restore the rule of Osiris.

The Cosmic Stroke of Midnight

Which brings me back to Graham Hancock's Work. For many years, courtesy of my own Work, I knew we were approaching the Cosmic Stroke of Midnight, which I knew heralded a new paradigm of human existence, the reason why Free Will was being and could be removed as the premise upon which human existence is based.

But in *Magicians of the Gods*², Graham Hancock outlined the highly significant marker in the celestial spheres that I know is the Cosmic Stroke of Midnight, and he documented the powerful Truth that the ancients were well aware it was coming and when.

We are not approaching the Cosmic Stroke of Midnight, we are in it and have been for the past sixty years, with twenty to go².

Scorpio, Sagittarius, Ophiuchus and the Centre of the Galaxy

As to the marker itself, briefly, there is a kind of star gate formed of Scorpio (energetically linked with the layer of DNA that governs transformation, karmic patterns, regeneration¹⁰) and Sagittarius (energetically linked with the layer of DNA that governs philosophy and growth (spirituality)¹⁰) with Ophiuchus behind and between them².

Ophiuchus is the high vibration thirteenth constellation in the Zodiac that holds the energy of transcendence that we Work with to make our way back to divine union, so whenever the sun is rising in this conjunction, from around mid-November to mid-January, we will experience powerful energetic influences that give rise to significant metaphysical Processes and powerful transformational change.

This is always so, in every annual cycle. There is nothing different about it. What has been different over the last sixty years is the fact that the very centre of the galaxy, seen as a dark bulge in the Milky Way, is also between this star gate, adding its extremely powerful energetic weight to the energies consciousness is normally Working with at this time².

At the same time, Orion has reached its northern limit, which the ancients associated with the mythical Phoenix burning up on its funeral pyre and arising, anew, out of the ashes², and we're moving into the cusp within which one great age of precession, the Age of Pisces, is beginning to give way to another, the Age of Aquarius.

I've said before, but I'll say it again, human existence looks very different under the different precessional ages. They are far more powerful in their regulating effects than humanity realises.

The ancient cultures around the world knew the time we exist in now would be a time of transformation and transition, and, therefore, also a time of great change and upheaval^{2, 4}.

The Religions of the Present Born of the Religions of the Past

The institutionalised religions, especially Judaism and Christianity, hold echoes of the divine Knowledge that was weaved into the Ancient Egyptian religion-philosophy because these religions were born out of that same religion-philosophy.

If you are going to fabricate a religion, it has to hold some elements of the divine Truth to give it some semblance of authenticity. I've said before, human consciousness is gullible but it's not stupid.

So what we've inherited today through the institutionalised religions is an echo of the divine Knowledge, but one that has been distorted through the filters of indoctrination and institutionalisation.

The Garden of Eden is one such distortion, holding, as it does, the ancient's concept of Zep Tepi. The Christian concept of being 'born again' is another. It is a misunderstanding, or, rather, a twisted distortion of the metaphysical Truth of the resurrection of consciousness through the powerful (Hermetic) Processes of mastery and initiation.

Genuinely transforming and transcending one's consciousness is vastly different from joining a church group, blindly adopting its beliefs, attending services every Sunday, and adhering to its rules, tenets and standards of behaviour. Believe me, I know just how vastly different these two are.

So it should come as no surprise that the concept of the Second Coming is another of these religious distortions.

The Second Coming

The Second Coming does not refer to Jesus who, as an iconic fabrication, never existed, and nor does it refer to Yeheshua, the man upon whom the iconic fabrication is based.

The Second Coming refers to Osiris, the purely metaphysical principle of good governance that is our birthright, our rightful heritage, and our natural state of being. And it refers to the golden age of cultural consciousness established under Osirian rule, within which human consciousness will, once again, thrive.

First, however, before we get to the golden age of Osirian rule, human consciousness has to go through a period of transformation, transcendence and transition. Having been through these myself, I know just how chaotic and turbulent they can be.

John Godolphin Bennett, a student of Ouspensky who ran an esoteric school in London, gave a lecture during which he summed up our time rather perfectly:-

“If the last great change happened ten thousand years before Christ [12,000 years ago] . . . then maybe we are due for another change equally as great in the way in which man lives on earth. Or, possibly, we may be due for something even greater: really, the arriving of a new race of people. We should take [this] seriously because it not only comes from the evidence of tradition, and from evidence that comes from the study of cycles, but simply from what our eyes see as we look about us.”⁴

There are interesting times ahead.
