Conscious Creation (4)

The Structural Framework of Creation

As the Creative principle is restored within us and we become Conscious Creators, we automatically consciously Work with a structural framework, within which Creation does and must operate. The structural framework of Creation is embodied and personified in Tefnut, one of the nine Egyptian gods of the Ennead, and it is, therefore, an inherent part of every Consciousness. The Knowledge of this framework deepens our understanding of Creation itself and facilitates the 'Conscious' aspect of Conscious Creation, so an in-depth exploration of it is beneficial, even necessary.

Shu and Tefnut

In acknowledging, understanding and Working* with the structural framework of Creation* we are Working with the level, or layer, of the Ennead – the nine Ancient Egyptian principle gods of Consciousness – that is Shu and Tefnut. This is the level, or layer, that emanates directly from Atum, the godhead.

Shu is the raw power of the Creative force that we hold within us, and his power really is unlimited. Nothing is impossible, as the Universe* itself and its 'Big Bang' Thought* demonstrates. Anything that can be imagined can be Created*.

But we cannot forget, with Creation comes destruction because destruction is an intrinsic and important aspect of Creation. Often, in Creating something new, the old must be torn down and cleared away first.

When you look out into the Universe, does it seem chaotic to you? It would be if we all went around Creating whatever we wished to, whenever and however the fancy took us. But it's not, is it? That's because Tefnut holds it all in order. Indeed, she is the order.

Just Because You Can

Remember the wonderful point made in the original *Jurassic Park*¹ by Ian Malcolm, the chaos theory mathematician? He rightly and quickly recognised the creators of Jurassic Park had focussed so much on the possibility of re-creating the dinosaur age – the can – that no one had bothered to stop and think about whether or not they should.

As Ian pointed out, the dinosaurs had their turn, and nature, or something else, marked them for extinction, thereby making way for us. Even a fool should be able to recognise that we would never co-exist very well with dinosaurs. And nor could we control such a creation, despite the fact that the Jurassic Park scientists arrogantly thought they could. Creation, in this instance, as Ian Malcolm knew, was more than likely going to lead to destruction that was bound to come back on us in the form of our extinction.

It's a good analogy. When it comes to Creation, just because you can, doesn't mean you should.

There has to be some sort of governing framework, and that framework really does have to be intrinsic, like breathing, so that we don't have to go around thinking about it all the time, because that would be rather tiresome. And, also, so that we don't have to go around policing it, because that would be rather bothersome for those who were stuck with the job of doing the policing.

The Garden Hose and the Endless Discordant Symphony

Remember our garden hose? As it's snaking dangerously out of control, the sheer power of it can whip the hose around to crack or even shatter a few windows, or hit people in the face. It can spray a powerful torrent of water onto some small, delicate plants so that they're washed away at worst or battered and bruised at best, all whilst leaving other plants in dry soil and in dire need of water. And the hose can tend to spray arcs of valuable water into the air so that it falls like rain on cement where it serves no purpose whatsoever.

In the aftermath, instead of a nourished, watered, happy and well-ordered garden there is only evidence of tumultuous chaos – a heck of a lot of mess to clean up, shattered glass, sore faces, mud everywhere, a drenched and annoyed gardener, empty patches where vanished plants should be, and damaged, bruised and drooping plants.

If the Universe is an orchestra playing a never-ending symphony of Creation, as it is, without the structural framework of the pre-composed music and the conductor holding it all together, keeping each of us in time, in tune, on the same page, playing the right notes at the right time, the resultant melee would be nothing more than a jarringly-discordant, clashing, colliding series of unrelated notes – noise that would necessitate covering one's ears if one was unfortunate enough to be within hearing distance.

You've heard an orchestra tuning its instruments in preparation for the performance, right? It sounds like a discordant melee, wouldn't you agree?

And so Tefnut is supremely vital. She is the conductor and the pre-composed symphony and the fundamental principles and laws of music, like basic note values, that everyone knows and follows. She brings order to the chaos. She brings coherence to Creation. She is the channel for Shu's incredible power. She is the guiding, directing hand of the gardener, controlling the hose itself and the flow of the force through it.

She is the rules of the game to which we are all subject, without exception and whether we like it or not.

And, yes, if you're asking, Tefnut is an inherent aspect of the Creative guidance of Isis. Or, rather, Isis does inherently hold the principle of Tefnut within her. But so, too, do all the sibling pairs *when they are in Balance.

Playing Chess

Returning to the analogy of the puppet master – our higher Consciousness – and each of us as the puppet, just say our puppet master has us play a game of chess.

Until now, we've had a choice as to how we play the game, here in this human experience, based on three possibilities:

- Playing the game our way:

We can go it alone, ignoring the urging of our puppet master, ignoring Process*, playing in Separation*, doing our own thing and making our own moves based on shallow whims and wants, and, worse, a dire lack of knowledge. We play the game our way without reference to our puppet master, despite the fact that we don't know the rules of the game, the calibre of our opponent, the strategy formulated to win, or the way each piece can move on the board. We are able to use both queens on the board, but we don't even know about them, let alone how to use them. So our king is constantly threatened, even captured and defeated, and our queens sit idle, useless, on the chess board of our consciousness. This is the way humanity is choosing to play, and, once again, as has occurred so many times before, we find ourselves in serious trouble, even staring down the barrel of our own annihilation.

- Playing the game in complete surrender and servitude:

We can play the game in a state of faith, trust and acceptance, knowing our puppet master is guiding us, urging us to move in specific ways, and surrendering to that guidance, recognising and acknowledging our master is possessed of a higher transcendent intelligence that we cannot even hope to match at the moment. So we play the game as our puppet master would have us play, moving the pieces on the board exactly as urged, without necessarily understanding the whys and wherefores of each move. This is what occurs when we discipline and apply ourselves to the practice of Passive Conscious Creation – a necessary step in reclaiming our Creative power, taking back our strings from the malevolence that controls them at the moment.

- Playing the game in Perfect Alignment*:

Or we can play the game knowledgeably, understanding the metaphysical dynamics of each individual move and how that move fits the overall strategy (Destiny*) conceived of to win the game and defeat our opponent. We still play in a foundational state of surrender and servitude because this is an innate part of us now. We never lose this once we achieve it. So we still make each move as our higher Consciousness would have us do so, but as we play we work seamlessly with our master, increasing, deepening, improving and building on our knowledge and understanding of the rules of the game, the calibre of the opponent, the overall strategy, and the nature of all the pieces on the board. Because we're playing knowledgeably, we're able to start making moves ourselves. So, we make a move and our master works with it beautifully, seamlessly, incorporating it into the overall strategy. In making these moves, we don't do so in a state of Separation, but, rather, in a state of perfect communion and connection with our master. This is Conscious Creation.

If we are going to opt for the third of these possibilities, or even the second, it would help us enormously if we knew a lot more about the rules of the game – rules that can be violated to a point, with dire consequences, but never broken.

The Universal Framework

With an existence in the Mind* of Atum – the Universe – comes a kind of structural integrity and everything a higher Consciousness needs to maintain that integrity. This structural integrity is an inherent aspect of Atum, so, naturally, it is also an inherent aspect of us all since each of us is not just in Atum's Mind, we are Atum's Mind – microcosms of the macrocosmic whole – each of us a stitch in the tapestry of the Universe.

Without structural integrity a building will end up collapsing in on itself, especially if some sort of force, like a strong wind, is applied to it. So, too, is this the case with a Created Thought. Without the structural integrity of the Universal framework within which Creation operates, Creation itself would, ultimately, implode or dissolve into nothingness.

As such, this structural integrity doesn't just form a part of us, it automatically forms a part of and underpins anything, and everything, we Create.

The Laws of the Universe

At the highest level of Consciousness, this structural integrity is formed out of a framework of Universal Laws* that hold true in all and every dimensional existence, not just this human one.

These Laws are not like the laws of our society, forming a constitutional set of rules that are external to us. Nor do we risk punishment if we break them, as we do with the rules and laws of our society, and nor are they constantly changing to reflect a changing society. We no longer need laws that relate to horse-drawn carriages or bows and arrows, for example.

But nor are these Laws like the laws of our religious systems, the Ten Commandments being the obvious ones that come immediately to mind. Religious these may be but they are still external laws that individuals either know about and adhere to, or not. Because these laws are external, individuals still have a choice as to whether or not the laws are obeyed and honoured.

The Universal Laws are unchanging, eternal and enduring. They are intrinsically entwined, all part of each other, so they all Work in protection of each other. So much are they entwined that teasing them apart and identifying them individually as they're operating within and around us can be a near-impossible exercise.

Laws of Necessity

Tho'th referred to them in the Hermetica as the *Laws of Necessity*⁹, which I love because it is very apt. Actually, it's a perfect designation.

These beautiful, powerful Universal Laws of Necessity are within us. Because they're within us we cannot break them but we can violate them, and when we do so, 'tis not punishment we bring upon ourselves, 'tis consequence – the most dire of consequences, as I said earlier.

When the Laws of the Universe are violated, the natural forces in the Universe will respond accordingly. When this occurs, we really do not want to be caught in the crossfire. Ironically, this is a perfect description for the situation humanity finds itself in right now, as a collective. We're in that very same crossfire. To say things are about to become unpleasant for us is a vast understatement.

The Law of Love

All the Universal Laws ultimately come under the umbrella of one, the most powerful Law in the Universe – the Law of Love*.

We can be forgiven for thinking otherwise in our devolved state, but the very fabric, or essence, of the Universe is Love, which is why the Law of Love is so vital but also so powerful. Ultimately, nothing supersedes this Law, nothing overrides it, nothing negates it, nothing circumvents it, and nothing is more powerful than it.

You know that old adage Love conquers all? It's true in ways we cannot even begin to imagine in our current state of devolution.

The Universe does have its own inherent protections as part of this Law, of which the Guardians* are a vital and intrinsic part. They uphold the Universal Laws, but not as police officers do by donning uniforms and holding badges that invest them with state authority. The Guardians are embodiments of the Law of Love, so they are a part of this Law, and the Law is a part of them.

When the Universal Laws are violated significantly, there will come the Guardians to reinforce and reinstate them, guiding or bringing consciousness back under the governing umbrella of them.

The Law of Higher Will and the Law of Purpose

Perhaps the most foundational precept of the Universal framework of Creation, and certainly the simplest, is the unavoidable Truth* that Creation must serve Higher Will*, and it must fulfil Purpose*, and, as such, it must form part of Process.

Which means Creation always, ultimately, must serve the evolution and growth of Consciousness, and it means Creation always, ultimately, must serve the expansion of Thought.

And this is a fundamental precept that applies to all souls in this Universe, whether incarnate or not. There is no exception and there is no exemption, ever, not even for the Dark Priests*. No doubt they would vehemently disagree. They can disagree all they like. It won't change the Truth. Which means, they are here, interfering and manipulating, only under the auspices of this most beautiful intertwined set of Laws.

Looking back over our history, whether recent or older, and looking around us today, it would appear that this precept is failing here in this human dimension. That is, if the Law of Higher Will and Purpose, as part of the Law of Love, is such a fundamental rule of Creation in this Universe, and it is, then how is it this human existence has devolved and degenerated into the soul-less state of Atlantis?

And, how can something as god-awful as those two wars of last century happen if this most fundamental precept of the Law of Love is being upheld? How on earth did these horrific wars serve Higher Will, fulfil Purpose and form part of the collective Process?

The answer is simple and can be summed up in two words: *Free Will. Choice.

Those two wars were direct consequences of a culmination of a multitude of choices made by billions of individuals over thousands of years.

Free Will as the Premise of Human Existence

With the gift of Free Will, or the curse, depending on your point of view, we chose descent into the abyss of Darkness* and Separation, and we have chosen to stay in the abyss ever since, whether or not we were aware of this as we were making the choices.

Operating under the burden of Perpetual Separation and the bedazzlement of illusion, as we are, seeing and knowing nothing else, we constantly and consistently make choices that satiate the Separated, misaligned ego and its base whims and wants. As a consequence, rather than honouring our divinity, we dishonour it, and ourselves, over and over again.

Courtesy of its underlying construct of Free Will, this human Creation is unique in the Universe. So much so that I've heard from and read in a number of different sources that all souls are required to come here at some point because the opportunity for learning and experience is so powerful, potent and unique. I don't doubt this is true.

But this is, too, the very reason why everything that has occurred and is occurring here has and is serving Higher Will and Purpose. We're learning the hard way that with choice made in the exercising of Free Will comes unavoidable consequence, and those consequences are, indeed, dire when we choose to satiate the whims and wants of the over-bloated, vampiric ego, dishonouring the soul in the process.

Free Will is Not Entirely to Blame

But even Free Will, in and of itself, is not wholly responsible for where we are and who we are and what we've become. Our choices have brought us low, there's no doubt about that. But we've had help, and a lot of it, too.

Forces of Darkness have seduced and manipulated us, and some of us have been far more susceptible to these seductions and manipulations than others. With these Dark seductions and manipulations has come the woundedness of the Perpetual Separation of consciousness and, with it, addiction to and entrapment in illusion.

Illusion can hide higher Truths, but it can never change them. The illusional reality can only ever hide the Truths of Creation from us, but this does not, in any way, exempt us from them or excuse us. The bedazzlement of illusion will never mean we don't have to play by Tefnut's rules. We will always have to play by her rules because, as I've stated and will state again, those rules don't exist outside of us. They exist within us, as an innate part of our own consciousness.

And, illusion notwithstanding, Tefnut's rules are about to become a lot more noticeable to us – another reason why it's time we knew about them – for one very profound reason.

The Missing Piece

In the Osirian myth, Isis searched the land, with Nephthys, for the pieces of Osiris, which, if you will recall, Set separated and scattered to the farthest reaches to render them irretrievable. Isis was relentless, though, as she tends to be, and she and Nephthys found the pieces, reassembled them, and magically brought Osiris back to life, albeit temporarily.

This is such a beautiful Truth, weaved into a beautiful mythical story and handed down to us from a culture that knew how to preserve this Knowledge* in such a way that it could be handed down and grasped by our modern collective consciousness. This is exactly how Isis Works within and through us when we bring her out of exile, relentlessly bringing the pieces of our fragmented psyche back together into one seamless whole.

The reason she could not bring Osiris back permanently, despite her power, is given to us in the myth. Although the sister goddesses searched for it, they failed to locate one piece, a rather important one – the phallus, which is, not coincidentally, itself profoundly symbolic of the Creative force, or the raw, unadulterated power of Creation.

So why did this happen? And why did the myth make damn sure we knew about it? What is being conveyed to us by this particular detail in the myth?

A Lethal Combination

With Osiris dead in the myth, as with us today individually and collectively, Set reigned supreme. Under Set's rule, consciousness is inherently Imbalanced* and, therefore, dangerously flawed. In this state Free Will is a supremely harmful tool – one that gives Set a powerful foothold on and in consciousness – a means of control – and one that empowers the ego, fosters addiction to the illusional reality, and perpetuates the wounds of consciousness I've written about extensively.

The two together – Set's rule and Free Will – form a lethal combination, figuratively and, as World Wars I and II illustrate, literally. Without Free Will, even harnessing Set's destructive power, as they are, those of the Darkness would have struggled to take us down into the soul-less state of Atlantis. Even with the lethal combination of the two – Free Will and Set reigning supreme – they have still needed many centuries, even millennia, to mould, shape and manipulate human existence into Atlantis.

Whilst ever the two, in combination, prevail, especially once established and entrenched, as they are in our culture, Isis cannot fully and permanently restore the Creative force within us. She cannot bring Osiris back collectively, and she cannot restore an Osirian state of being within us individually. She will be forced to fight the ego, and it will win as many times as not.

Even knowing a powerful Process of Mastery* was Working through me, choosing it, willingly and consciously surrendering to it, and being passionately devoted to it, I would not be what I am or where I am today if the underlying premise of my Process had not been the removal of Free Will. I mean that absolutely and unequivocally. If not for the removal of Free Will within me, these monographs would never have been written. I would still be entrapped. Of that I'm certain. Such is the power of the lethal combination over consciousness.

If Isis is to fully succeed in her Work, either one or the other of these two states, or conditions, must be surrendered, or, preferably, both. Either Free Will must be surrendered and/or Set's rule must be ended.

To this end, the Guardians are interceding, for the first time in aeons of human existence. They are removing Free Will as a rule of this human game.

Changing the Rules of the Game

I very much doubt you will understand, at least initially, just how much advantage I have given you with this one piece of transcendent Knowledge. If I had known about the surrender and removal of Free Will at the beginning of my Transition*, I would have understood some of the dynamics at play in my Process a lot sooner than I did – dynamics I named 'forbiddleness' and 'withholding'.

Whether or not understanding would have alleviated at least some of my pain, I don't know. Understanding always helps me, and some, not all, of my pain did stem from the bewilderment I've referred to a couple of times in these monographs. The pain of my bewilderment (a 'what the fuck is happening to me?' lament) has provided a primary impetus for my writing because I would spare others this same pain if I can.

As a collective, but also as individuals, the fact of the Guardians changing the rules of the human game is incredibly important, not just in the actuality, or outworking, of it, but also in the Knowledge of it. I can't repeat it enough. The human experience was Created on the premise of Free Will, but with the Cosmic Stroke of Midnight, Free Will is being removed as the premise of this whole thing.*

It's happening even as I write this.

Breaking the Lethal Combination at the Deepest Level of Consciousness

So, the lethal combination of Set's rule and Free Will is being broken at the level of the very fabric, or soul-essence, of this whole human experience. Is it, then, any wonder the Darkness and those who serve it are engaging in such desperate agendas? They are in the Process of losing one of their most vital tools of manipulation and control. This is the loss of Free Will at the deepest levels of human consciousness.

So must it be. The brutal Truth of Free Will is, as I've said many times, humanity does such utterly horrific things with it. All we need do is bloat the ego just a little bit – feed it just a smidgen – with or without help from the Darkness, and Free Will becomes a potentially highly-dangerous dynamic. You have to remember, too, we are not just subject to the consequences of our own choices, we are also subject to the consequences of the horrific choices of others, as World War II demonstrates, as do all the wars ever fought.

A Highly Dangerous Toy

Such is the state of devolution here in this human existence, Free Will has become like a dangerous toy, or even a weapon, in the hands of ignorant, wayward little children who know nothing of what they're really playing around with, and they're getting hurt.

And whilst ever it remains as the premise of this human experience, the human ego will continue to think it reigns supreme, and it will continue to make its horrible, wayward choices. As such, the individual and collective human ego will continue to bring us to the brink of annihilation over and over again. This has to cease. It's time.

The Guardians and many souls in service to the Light* have Worked tirelessly and relentlessly, as has Isis, to guide humans back to union with Atum (God) of their own Free Will – to make the choice for themselves to return to heaven. Always, though, without fail, choices are made by individuals that plunge cultures, societies and the collective right back into the abyss.

Yes, we have been manipulated, at the mercy of Dark agendas and manipulations, but the fact remains. Whenever and wherever we have become Set's co-conspirators, it has, ultimately, always been our choice to do so.

By now, it's pretty obvious to all, except humans, that whilst ever Free Will remains in the mix, humanity will also remain wholly unable to break free of the infernal and eternal karmic cycle of rising to great heights of civilisation only to descend, at the same time, into the abyss of Atlantis.

The Only Means of Our Salvation

Does the idea of the removal of Free Will scare you?

Then you need to remember Free Will is being used against us. Free Will is always our downfall. It is, therefore, the means by which we continue to bring destruction upon ourselves.

Free Will is the means of us choosing the first of the options in the way we play the cosmic game of chess. It is the choice to adhere to the script of our Destiny or to ignore it, erring from it, and doing our own thing. Free Will is, therefore, the means by which Destiny often remains unfulfilled, not just in one life but, very often, in multiple lives, even numerous lives – many, many hundreds of them, in fact.

What does it say about human civilisation that the removal of Free Will is the only means of our salvation? It's a sad indictment on humanity, and we need to face the Truth of this.

But if you will allow me, I can personally attest to and, therefore, reassure you of the Truth that the removal of Free Will is a blessing, which is why it's happening. So do not be afraid. On the contrary, allow this Knowledge to stir hope within you.

The Removal of Free Will

Do you wonder how such a thing as the removal of something as fundamental as Free Will is possible?

It's possible because this whole thing, the human experience in its entirety, is a Created Thought – a synthesised, interweaved blend of a whole range of thought patterns – held in the much-higher Consciousness of a single being, although there are many higher, powerful, beautiful beings helping her hold it . . . yes, her.

She is our most powerful metaphysical influence. Nothing in heaven or on Earth can alter the Truth of this, not even the most powerful and prevalent black magic rituals. So powerful is she where we are concerned that, even with Free Will in the mix, hers is the energy we Work with every moment of our lives whilst here.

And she is changing the underlying construct of the original Thought. She is, in fact, restoring the dynamics – Creation itself, the fabric of reality, Process, the Universal Laws, the Separation and misalignment of consciousness – and the dimensional facets – the imagination, the subconscious, the heart, higher Consciousness – of the Thought.

This is how Creation Works. When we change the thought, we change what is being Created. This is how Isis Works her magic. She is masterful at changing our thoughts – those in the depths, those in the shallows, and every one in between. This is how she directs, guides and channels the Creative force.

A Manifestation of the Removal of Free Will

Surrendering Free Will is not as hard as it might seem at first glance. On an individual basis, it's just a choice, one that might need reaffirming every now and then. But with the removal of Free Will as the premise upon which the human experience is built and based, that choice is not about whether we surrender Free Will or not, it's about surrendering to the Knowledge that we no longer exercise our Free Will, and, then, offering no internal resistance.

In other words, the choice we must now make is whether to surrender and accept or to resist, stamp our feet, cross our arms over our chest and rail against our lot. If we resist, we don't and won't change a thing, we will just make life incredibly difficult for ourselves.

One way the removal of Free Will is becoming manifest in our lives is through the principle of existence I've named 'Blocked Doors and Open Windows', and the 'three strikes' (or more, depending on how stubborn we are) that accompany Blocked Doors.

I can see this dynamic operating in individual lives, but I can also see it operating at a global level. I confess I am very interested to see what will occur if those at the helm of the tyrannical dictatorships try to exercise their Free Will by instigating another world war. They have already been shown, very clearly and powerfully, that they will not be allowed to utilise nuclear weapons².

The Ultimate Misalignment

Even without the removal of Free Will as the premise of the constructed Thought that underpins human existence, Processes of Mastery and the guidance of Isis, in moving us through the layers of our psyche into the core of our consciousness, obviate Free Will.

The reason this is so is, once again, very simple. Free Will is itself a massive misalignment of consciousness.

As purely higher beings, Free Will simply does not form part of our Truest Nature*. Free Will has been, until now, only a characteristic of this dimensional frequency – an aspect of the third-dimensional character-identity. So, with initiation and the natural and accompanying transition from third to fourth dimensional existence, Free Will is neutralised anyway.

The Ultimate Deception

But even now, in this culture of Atlantis, Free Will is itself a complete misnomer – an illusion within an illusion. There is only Dark manipulation and control here, now. There is no Free Will. There is only the deception of it.

In other words, we think we are exercising our Free Will, but we are not.

Have you ever seen a hypnotist practicing his art? Do those who are hypnotised by him exercise their Free Will? All it takes is a trigger, which he implants in their consciousness, and they are at his mercy, under his spell. And he can get his volunteers, or victims, to do the most embarrassing, extreme, and horrible things. Such is our Atlantean culture.

Were all those individuals who were stripped of everything they owned, including their pride and dignity, and then shuffled, naked, into gas ovens in Nazi Germany exercising their Free Will?

The ultimate irony of Free Will is that of it utterly preventing us being the master of our domain. Puppets and strings! We think we're exercising our Free Will, but all we're doing is putting our strings in the hands of puppet masters who care not one whit about us, our well being, our souls.

The Law of Balance and the Law of Movement

I have written extensively in previous monographs about the two beautiful Laws of Balance* and Movement* – Laws that are a vital and intrinsic part of the structural framework of Creation – so I won't do so in this monograph. Suffice it to say, these are two of my favourites, and it is these two, above all others, the Guardians innately hold within them, and closely monitor and restore when violated, as symbolised by Krishna's incarnation in the Bhagavad Gita as a charioteer.

These two Laws are intrinsically entwined such that each preserves and protects the other, and, crucially, separately and together, they protect Consciousness, particularly the aspect of Consciousness that is Process.

As I hope I've made clear, there is, occurring here in our modern human existence, a significant violation of these two Laws, to our very great detriment. The consequences of the violation of these two Laws alone, before we look at any of the others, are playing out at every level of the human experience and in every aspect of it.

Process is not a Law, it is an innate aspect of the Nature of Consciousness. Process and Thought cannot, under any circumstance, be teased apart, even in a stagnating state such as ours. Each and every Universal Law forms part of the protection of Process and Thought, but the Laws of Balance and Movement are so crucial that when they are significantly violated, as is the case with us, consciousness becomes gravely and deeply damaged, as human consciousness is now.

Opposite Attraction to Fill a Void

You know the old expression opposites attract? Well, it's not true. Or, rather, it's not Truth.

It might apply in a shallow romantic situation, and, in fact, it often does because in our shallow Separated existence we tend to try to fill the void in our souls by 'falling in love' with people who possess the characteristic, or characteristics, we believe will fill that void.

A lover can only ever be a reflection of how and how much we love ourselves, or don't, as is often the case here, now. If we don't love ourselves, or, worse, if we hate, despise or dislike ourselves, we can only Attract* a lover who will confirm and reflect this back to us.

In this sense, and speaking generally, we tend to 'fall in love' not because we love, but because we lack. Put another way, we 'fall in love' not because we love ourselves, but because we don't.

Sometimes it can take a while, many years, for the Truth to come to light, and often, when it does, we deny it. We're certainly not very good at recognising and acknowledging Truths like these. But just because we refuse to acknowledge them, doesn't make these Truths go away. On the contrary, they have a decidedly-annoying tendency to persist.

There are multiple reasons why we 'fall in love' out of lack, but very possibly the most powerful is the Truth of Creation that no one can Attract to themselves what they are not, they can only Attract to themselves what they are. This is the outworking of another of the Universal Laws underpinning Creation – the Law of Attraction.

The Law of Attraction

The Truth about Attraction* as it applies under and as part of the Law of Attraction is actually the opposite of that old expression opposites attract. In actual fact, like Attracts like.

And when I say 'like Attracts like', I'm referring specifically to patterns of thought. Which is all well and good if the Attraction is based on positive thoughts, not so good if the Attraction is based on negative thoughts.

We have to remember, we are our thoughts. We are Thought. So we Attract out of how we are, which is itself born of our thoughts, and, again, we have to remember that we are different thoughts at different levels of ourselves. Our psyches comprise a whole cocktail of different thoughts, or, more specifically, different thought patterns, the most powerful of which are those that exist in the deepest layers.

You can see a positive Attraction operating under the Law of Attraction in religious communities where people who are seeking similar things come together to form a cohesive whole, like a bee hive. They are Attracting each other out of a similarly-resonating thought – the seeking of and a belonging to something more, something greater than themselves.

They're actually Attracted to and Attracting into their realities a form of the Horus rule, or governance of consciousness, and it is a form of protection for them as long as the Horus authority remains trustworthy and authentic. But if a soul, or a consciousness, outgrows a specific expression, or manifestation, of the Horus rule, or even part of it, or evolves beyond it, it can be restricting. It can entrap. It can become a trap, a snag.

Isis tends to generate this kind of fundamental separation, slipping her little ankhs of power into a consciousness and turning them, setting that consciousness free of the snag. Transcendent Knowledge, like the Knowledge that the ritual of communion is based on black magic, is a manifestation, and an example, of these ankhs of power.

A soul experiencing this has changed the thought pattern of Attraction, so resonance with the group, or with the thought patterns holding the group together, starts to become discordance. This is rarely a pleasant or easy experience, as I know full well from personal experience. On the contrary, it can be very difficult, painful and confusing.

In this case, Attraction is no longer operating in its positive expression. Instead, the Attraction has become repellent, or repellence, but the consciousness can remain trapped in the group by other things, like programming, or, worse, fear – fear of exile, isolation, estrangement, loneliness, punishment arising from disobedience, fear of being wrong. The resultant inner conflict can be extremely painful, and even, at times, dangerous.

The Complexities of Attraction

The Law of Attraction can seem simple initially, whether or not you agree with its basic tenet, like Attracts like, but Attraction is actually quite complex because it has many and varied forms of expression, all of which are weaved into our lives and the fabric of our realities at any point in time. We're always Attracting a multitude of different things on the basis of different internal thought dynamics, in other words, and teasing them apart and identifying them can be all but impossible.

That is, understanding and unravelling what, exactly, it is within us that is generating these different Attractions can be a difficult and complex exercise. Our psychology is deep and complex, as I've said many times, because of the labyrinthine nature of the psyche, and because of shallow layers that hide and confound deeper ones, and vice versa.

All too often, we Attract not out of positive thought patterns at all but out of our deeply-held negative ones. And, usually, these deep shadowed thoughts are beliefs we don't even realise we're holding about ourselves.

The group of people who gathered around my father decades ago were seeking the guidance of a higher love. It was there in dad, too, but, tragically, dad himself negated this beautiful aspect of himself courtesy of a need for the punishing authority he believed he deserved but lacked in his youth. Out of this deep-seated belief, he Attracted that rod of punishment into his reality in the form of the man at the centre of a harmful, damaging cult, and dad joined our small group to this man's cult³.

Love, acceptance and guidance morphed into judgement, condemnation and spiritual abuse, and dad became like the Pied Piper, leading us all to our spiritual doom. If only I'd understood the Law of Attraction back then and the deeply-wounded psychology in dad that was the true means of our beautiful little group becoming part of something vile (appropriately, an anagram of evil), but I was only eight years old – of an age to think my dad could do no wrong.

A Cruel Attribute of the Law of Attraction

If we believe we're not lovable, acceptable or valuable, if we believe we're nothing, or if we believe we're like refuse, we will Attract relationships into our reality out of this belief and will be treated accordingly. This can seem like a cruel attribute of the structural framework of Creation, but this is exactly how reality becomes the poultice that draws our darkest shadows up and out of us so that we can know they exist within us, and so we can, then, Work with them to resolve and clear them.

Our deeply-held thoughts are often so deep within us we're unaware of them. How else can we know about them, then, if not for the Law of Attraction operating within us, forming and shaping our reality out of these same deeply-held thoughts?

When we clear these shadowed thoughts from out of our psyche they're gone for good, and we start to Attract relationships out of different, healthier thought patterns – thoughts that are more resonant with Love rather than a lack of Love.

What We Give Out, We Attract

The Law of Attraction Works in another way, too. What we give out, we Attract. Or, put another way, what we give out comes back on us.

Individuals who practice magic are well aware of this principle of Creation which is why they know that any spell they cast will come back on them magnified. If you send a curse out into the Universe, it will come back on you. If you send a curse out into the Universe with the intention of hurting someone, that intent will come back to hurt you.

This is a basic principle of Attraction that cannot be circumvented or avoided.

So what occurs when we send a tirade of abuse to each other via social media? It comes back on us, and it doesn't have to come back on us through social media. In our ignorance we rarely make the connections between what we give out and what we get back, which is a great pity because we're not learning the harsh lessons that accompany the abuse coming back on us.

Have you ever noticed how angry people Attract into their realities other people and situations that reflect their anger and so constantly arouse it? Angry people live angry lives, full of anger-generating situations, because they're Attracting to themselves what they are.

I need to touch on an important addition to this point, although I won't go into it in depth here. The Law of Attraction operates beyond our physical reality. Meaning, when we hold deep, dark, festering emotions within us that we don't resolve, like rage, jealousy and hatred, we can also potentially Attract energies and entities beyond reality. These entities then feed off these powerful emotions. This is a form of psychic attack, and these entities have a vested interest in stirring up and perpetuating these dark emotions.

Using the Law of Attraction to Perfection

The Law of Attraction Works within and through us always. We can't stop it. No one holds that kind of power, not even God. Attraction is constantly shaping our realities, and, yet, we know nothing of it or of the dynamics within us that are generating it.

Whilst we can't stop, prevent or negate it, we can learn to use this Law to perfection. There is a catch, of course. We have to become Creators rather than destroyers. So it should come as no surprise that Isis uses the Law of Attraction to perfection, but then, so, too, does Nephthys.

The principles of Attraction don't just apply to us as individuals. They apply to groups, to cultures, and to us as a collective.

The Eruption of Vesuvius

Take, as an example, the eruption of Vesuvius in 79 CE (AD if you're old school) that destroyed and buried the Roman city of Pompeii. This is easier than using the last destruction of the last Atlantis because we can 'see' Pompeii, quite literally, but the last Atlantean destruction is equally as appropriate as an example.

Every individual contributes to the culture of a city like Pompeii. Every individual is a by-product of that culture, and every individual perpetuates it by feeding and fuelling it, which automatically means every individual contributes to and is affected by the energetic profile of the city. When we break free of this cycle, we are in the world but not of it as 'Jesus' urged us. So the people of Pompeii were a part of the corruption that existed in the city when it was destroyed, utterly, as its archaeological remains attest to.

The many individuals whose agonising final moments have been forever captured and preserved in the imprint left by their bodies in the tomb of ash that buried them lived a frightening and traumatic reality in those dying moments. Did they really Create this in their reality? Surely they were just victims of a random event? None of us would willingly Create such a reality for ourselves, would we?

When it comes to Creation, we operate within the framework of it, and, Free Will or not, there is nothing we can do to escape its Laws. There are always multiple dynamics that form the whys and wherefores of experiences such as the destruction of Pompeii, but one I can see in this collective experience operated under the Law of Attraction.

Prior to the eruption of Vesuvius, Pompeii had become a cesspool of toxic and nefarious political, sexual, and social corruption, so much so that even a Roman Emperor was compelled to act, laying a punishment on the city that forbade the games and entertainments the people craved like drug addicts craving an opium fix. Pompeii became a good (or bad) old fashioned den of iniquity.

The people of Pompeii were warned, probably a number of ways, too, very much like the people of Sodom and Gomorrah in the Bible, but the warnings were ignored. The cultural consciousness of the city – its pursuits, focusses, behaviours, its complete lack of morals, ethics, order, its corruption – had degenerated to such an extent that the city had become deeply psychologically damaging – soul destroying – for its inhabitants, its visitors, and well beyond it, too. It radiated wickedness, and it Attracted wickedness.

The energy of corruption at Pompeii built into a pressure that even Gaia could no longer tolerate, and so she fought back. That pressure exploded outward and washed over the city, clearing away the toxic energy in the area and restoring Balance.

'God' did not punish Sodom and Gomorrah, but 'he' did still warn the people there, as the Universe always does, not because 'he' judged, condemned and punished the city, but because 'he' knew how the structural framework of Creation Works. The people were Creating their own tragic and traumatic fate, just as the people of Pompeii Created theirs.

I wrote earlier that we really do not want to be caught in the crossfire when the natural forces in the Universe Work to right the violations of the Universal Laws. Pompeii is a good example of a population that got caught in that very same crossfire.

Sound familiar? If not, it should, because we, too, have been warned multiple times and in a myriad of different ways about the tragic and traumatic fate we are Creating for ourselves, and we, too, continue to ignore those warnings.

The Law of Attraction and Process

The Law of Attraction Works for us in another way, too, a most powerful and beautiful way, such that we Attract whatever is needed to serve and facilitate Process. This can be like a beautiful, seamless symphony of Creation when Process is moving and flowing as it should, and when it is healthy and flourishing under the Laws of Balance and Movement.

We Attract into our realities people, events, situations that urge us to reach higher, to go further, to stretch and challenge ourselves, to heal, to reclaim our fragmented pieces. Then, the Law of Attraction facilitates and Works with the Laws of Balance and Movement because all the Universal Laws are a part of the same whole.

With Free Will in the mix, oftentimes, the Law of Attraction operates out of positive and negative versions of the same thought at the same time thereby setting up a choice of different paths we can take – a path of healing or a path of compounded woundedness; a path of self honour or one of self compromise; a path of higher potentiality or one of continued stagnation; a path of true freedom or one of entrapment.

When the Laws of Balance and Movement are significantly violated, as they are now, the Law of Attraction Works on the basis of the resulting Imbalance and stagnation. Then, it gets ugly. When Creation turns into destruction, the Law of Attraction Works on the basis of that destruction. Then, as Pompeii demonstrates, it gets ugly.

But the Laws of Balance and Movement are not the only Laws that Work with the Law of Attraction. There is another powerful and vital Universal Law that is entwined with the Law of Attraction, and I believe many people in this modern world should be deeply and profoundly afraid of this Law and its interaction with the Law of Attraction.

'Tis the Law of Karma I'm referring to.

The Law of Karma

'Karma' is a word that is thrown around a lot by people who haven't necessarily thought deeply, or even shallowly, about the dynamics involved. As such, the word is being used a lot now by people who don't necessarily completely understand it. This has the effect of reducing it and, especially, the Law of Karma, to one of those clichés I have alluded to throughout these monographs.

So, once again, we think we know about karma and its very powerful Law, but we have no real idea of the depth and extent of it in our experience now, and just how much it is shaping our individual and collective realities. Humanity, speaking generally, has no idea how powerful this Law is, nor how bloody dangerous it can be when we choose to act out of the vampiric, over-bloated ego, dishonouring and lacerating the soul in the process.

The Burden of Karmic Wounds

If you were burdened by a karmic wound that required you to become a victim of a violent rape and murder, would you want to know about it?

The dread of the experience to come would loom on the horizon of your existence like a heavy, dark, threatening thunder cloud, would it not? A cloud you could not avoid, no matter the path you decided to take through your life. All paths would lead you straight into that thunder cloud and there would not be a damn thing you could do to change it.

But so, too, would the knowledge of what this karmic burden signified for you – that you had, in some other time and place, done this to someone yourself. I don't know which of these aspects of the karmic burden would be worse.

When it comes to karmic consequence – the outworking of the Law of Karma – you might as well just grit your teeth and get it over with because you will have to live out its effects. Prolonging the inevitable doesn't achieve anything at all.

The Law of Karma is the reason Socrates warned us there's only one person who can truly hurt us and that's ourselves. 'Jesus' put it a little more benignly: do unto others as you would have them do unto you.

A Deeper Look at the Law of Karma

I saw an item on our news many months ago about a poor young mother who was being attacked by a magpie. Her instinctive reaction was, naturally, to protect herself and her newborn baby, so, to that end, she dropped to the ground. But in doing so she hit her baby's head on the cement, and the child died as a result of the injury.

My first thought, when I saw this, was one of pure empathy. How the hell do you get over something like that? My heart went out to her. Not only would she grieve over the loss of her child but she would also somehow have to come to terms with her own culpability in that loss.

My second thought was to wonder why the hell she Created this experience in her reality. What has she done somewhere else, in another time and place, to necessitate the Creation of such an experience?

In seeing this item on the news, we see only the physical circumstances of her life as it is now and so we just assume she's innocent. And so she is in terms of who she is in this life, but the experience Created in her reality tells me otherwise. You have to remember, true innocence is a state of being without fear, shadow, and karmic loads, burdens and lacerations. Very few of us are truly innocent.

We might throw the word 'karma' around shallowly but karmic debts, burdens, bonds, lacerations, obligations and consequences are anything but shallow.

The effects of our choices ripple out in all directions of time, and these ripple effects do not cease when one life ends and another begins. On the contrary, the ripple effect of choice continues through all our incarnations, not just the one we're living now. Likewise, we take all our karmic burdens, bonds and obligations with us into every life we live. There's no escape from our karmic Imbalances.

And, until we bring our karmic load back into Balance, the Process of our lives will concentrate its efforts on discharging, resolving and clearing it. So, whilst ever the burden of karma is heavy, we needn't, and we don't, bother with Destiny. There's no point.

The Greatest Calamity of War

We can tend to forget, looking back at the 'historical events' of those two world wars of last century, that once they were over, there was still much devastation to face, resolve, clean up and clear away, both within and without. Watching movies like *Frantz*⁴ (the story of a young French musician struggling to come to terms with the fact that he had shot and killed a German man during the war) makes you realise that, perhaps, those who died were the lucky ones.

Not every wound in our soul is karmic, and not every scar on our soul incurs karmic consequences.

Everyone who died in those wars did not have to deal with the loss and grief, the devastation of whole towns and villages laid to waste, or communities torn apart, nor did they have to go through the process of rebuilding, nor endure the poisonous legacy of hatred, prejudice, and antipathy that prevailed in Europe following those wars.

And they did not have to live on, as did the young French musician in Frantz, living with the wounds inflicted on their souls by their choices and actions in the context of those wars, and with the scars of horror, terror and trauma.

When we look back on those wars we see the physical devastation, but the metaphysical devastation – that pure abstraction we cannot see – far, far eclipsed any physical effects. The fact is, the greatest calamity of those wars was the massive karmic load heaped upon humanity at every level – individuals, cultures, the collective – greatly exacerbating our already burdensome karmic load. And this is before we look at karmic bonding.

Himmler's SS soldiers forcibly took people from their homes, tore them from their families, heedless of age, stripped them of everything they owned, packed them into trains so tightly they were often forced to stand, shunted them through the gas ovens or kept them in a state of squalor, filth and starvation in the concentration camps.

There is a situation in our modern reality that duplicates this experience perfectly. We treat our animals this way when we send them to abattoirs to be slaughtered for meat, and in my opinion, many Nazis have doomed themselves to this exact experience, as animals, probably pigs because pigs are quite consciously aware. 'Tis the only way they will truly understand what they did to their Holocaust victims.

If it serves Purpose for a soul to be incarnated as an animal, that soul will incarnate as an animal. This is the Law of Purpose Working with the Law of Karma.

The Priests of Darkness, in using Hitler as their tool of destruction, condemned him to a hellish ride, one that began in his life and will continue long after it. He was in hell in his own lifetime, and while that hell was initially more internal than external – plagued by nightmares and neuroses – it spilled out of his internal reality, becoming manifest in his external reality.

He Created his neuroses in and as his reality in the form of multiple assassination attempts and betrayals by those closest to him. The carnage Hitler was inflicting on the world, he was also Creating in his own personal world. He (supposedly) committed suicide in the absolute ruins of his own capital city, broken, defeated, ill, all his grandiose plans and bids for power as ruined as his capital city. But if he thought that was the end, he was gravely mistaken. It was, in Truth, merely a beginning.

Hiding Behind Man-made Laws and the Context of War

Not every choice and action made in the context of war increases the karmic load or incurs karmic debt, but whether or not they do, we are not in any fit state to make that judgement call. We cannot know. And, just because the choices and actions were made in the context of war, does not exclude or exempt any individuals, whether or not they were brought to account subsequently.

Hiding behind man-made laws, or circumventing them, or hiding behind the context of war is absolutely no protection from the Law of Karma. We can fool ourselves and each other, but there's absolutely no fooling the Universe. Ever.

The Hollywood movie, *American Sniper*⁵, glamorised the actions of this sniper, and he has been touted a hero, but I strongly suspect the guy was a hunter at heart – a killer who killed for sport and found a way to do it legally. He could circumvent the laws of man and fool society but the Universe wasn't deceived, and the Laws of Karma and Attraction Worked powerfully even in his own lifetime. He was killed the same way he had killed so many others.

The Universe is not swayed by things like chains of command or military decrees that necessitate soldiers following orders without question or without reference to their own conscience, their own soul.

The movie *A Few Good Men*⁶ made this point rather well when the marines Dawson and Downey were acquitted of murder because they followed orders, but were still dishonourably discharged. Soldiers these men may well have been but they were also human beings with intellects, a conscience, and souls. They and any other soldier might surrender their personal power to military rules and the chain of command but in doing so they will be subject to the Law of Karma when their actions hurt other souls.

Whenever I see the movie *Syriana*⁷, I always notice the ordinary men sitting at their computers with their military hierarchy standing behind them, pressing the buttons that cause a whole cavalcade of innocent people to be wiped out with a strike missile. Those ordinary men can't hide behind their military commands or commanders when it comes to the Law of Karma. All they're doing physically is press a few buttons in direct response to their commands, but metaphysically they are wounding their own souls and subjecting themselves to the consequences as determined by this most powerful Law.

The USS Indianapolis

The USS Indianapolis was a carrier during World War II, but she was tragically and traumatically torpedoed by a Japanese submarine on July 30, 1945⁸. The torpedo ripped her apart and she sank in 12 minutes, time enough to have allowed her command to send a distress call. As she sank, she took 300 or so of her crew with her.

About 800, or thereabouts, of the crew survived, but no one apparently heard or received the distress signal, and no one, apparently, noticed for five days that the Indianapolis had not returned to port as expected.

Is the US Navy really that inept? I think not. This is how these games work. The powers that be wanted the Indianapolis scuttled, I think. Which means they probably betrayed her and her crew to the Japanese and deliberately left her crew to a rather dreadful fate.

The survivors drifted at sea for five days, battling heat during the day, cold during the night, dehydration, fatigue and sharks. Many didn't make it, and some who did cannot abide water even to this day. They were eventually spotted by a pilot and so were rescued.

The powers that be must have been pissed off when the captain and so many of the crew survived, but they made the captain, Captain Charles McVay, the scapegoat.

Despite the torpedo, the context of war, and his loyal and impressive service, Captain McVay was blamed for the disaster and was court-martialled, thus exposing him to the vitriolic abuse from families of lost crew members, especially at Christmas. After a few years of this abuse, he reached the limit of what he could handle and committed suicide with his old service revolver. After his death, many of the surviving crew members campaigned relentlessly to clear his name, and they eventually succeeded.

I was watching the unfolding story of the Indianapolis and her crew with interest, but then a particular detail came to light in the telling of this story that made me sit up and sent shivers down my spine and arms, raising goosebumps on my skin. Even now, writing about it, those same shivers are running down my arms, spine and legs.

Four days before she was torpedoed, the Indianapolis delivered a secret cargo to Tinian Island⁸. That cargo contained the internal components of the atomic bomb that was dropped on Hiroshima.

The atomic bomb. Splitting the atom. Mmmm. It's like harnessing the power of God for highly destructive purposes – an absolute violation – an abomination. A weapon of mass destruction and devastation. Pure evil.

Americans can clap themselves on the back in congratulations for supposedly ending the war all they like, even though there were many reasons why that war ended, not least of which was the supreme intelligence of Winston Churchill, but the dynamics of karma resulting from those two atomic bomb drops have not yet fully played out. That's scary.

After six years of horror and carnage, the act of dropping those bombs on those Japanese cities was beyond horrific.

And, tragically, I think the Indianapolis found herself caught up in the ripple effect of these karmic dynamics.

That clichéd expression, what goes around comes around, is true in the most powerful of ways where karma is involved, and sometimes it comes back very quickly. Sometimes not. Whether or not it does depends on the Law of Purpose, but also on the interaction of the Law of Karma with those other powerful Universal Laws.

Perhaps now you understand why I believe Free Will has become like a dangerous weapon in the hands of ignorant little children who have no idea what they're playing around with, and they're getting hurt.

True Forgiveness

There is another aspect of the Law of Karma I alluded to earlier – karmic bonding. Souls become bound, as if they are held together by strong, unbreakable chains, when the choices and actions of one, or some, hurt or harm others.

Forgiveness can break the chains of karmic bonding, but there's a catch. The forgiveness has to be authentic. And, once again, the Universe is masterful at distinguishing true forgiveness from false or shallow or ignorant forgiveness.

True forgiveness, not the trite clichéd form of forgiveness espoused by religious systems, is a Process that must involve at least some form or degree of understanding, preferably compassionate understanding. When we come to a place of authentic, true forgiveness within ourselves, the effect is truly powerful in ways we can barely grasp at the moment. Karmic bonds dissolve.

This means the victim of the karmic interaction holds the power to break the bond, thereby setting him- or herself free of the necessity of encountering the soul, or souls, again, and living through circumstances of reversal.

Nothing, however, relieves or breaks or negates the necessity of experiencing the consequences arising directly out of the laceration of the soul that occur when we hurt others. Nothing can remove this necessity, which is why the concept of 'Jesus' dying for and taking on the burden of our 'sins' is so utterly ludicrous. No one, god or otherwise, can do such a thing. No one, god or otherwise, can relieve us of the burden of our karmic load. Only we can do this by living the consequences.

And for some, the karmic road is long and arduous. Unfortunately, collectively, we have walked that very same long and arduous road. Such is our ignorance where the structural framework of Creation and its Universal Laws are concerned.
