

Monograph Thirty-five: Conscious Creation (6) The Horus Plane and the Creative Flow

There are two planes of existence from which we can fight Set and the Dark Priests. There are also two planes of existence from which, and within which, we can Create. In both scenarios, the power of the lower plane does not and cannot compare with the power of the higher. On this higher plane, Set, and those who harness his power, are rendered powerless. To defeat him and unleash the True power of Creation, we need the higher plane. But the lower is all we know. So how do we access the higher? How do we touch it, Work with it, communicate with it, and, most importantly, set free its power?

Starting with Actuality and Working up to Potentiality

As with a couple of the earlier monographs, I could easily have entitled this one differently, opting for ‘The Osiris Plane and the Creative Flow’ rather than ‘The Horus Plane’. Given the inherent association of Creation and Creative power with Osiris, the former, as a title, makes more sense. But I’ve settled on the latter rather than the former for two good reasons.

The first is, as with those previous monographs, I have no choice but to start with the status quo, or, as Aristotle would put it, start with actuality and Work up to potentiality. We are, in other words, on the Horus Plane, but as I’ve taken great pains to point out, Set rules it, and because Set rules here, we’re not aware of either plane, Horus or Osiris, lower or higher.

Until and unless our awareness shifts, there really is no point in even talking about the Osiris Plane. Having stated that so baldly, in this monograph I will change that awareness. And the good news for us is just in Knowing about the Osiris Plane we begin the rather arduous task of Connecting with it, and in Connecting with it we set in motion the rather exciting prospect of setting it, and him, free.

But I’m getting ahead of myself. First, we need to start with what we are, where we are, how we are, and who we are, hence my choice of title.

The Devil’s Playground

I wish I could say we exist fully and authentically on the Horus Plane. But we don’t. We exist in hell – Set’s Playground – which, to be clear, is lower than the Horus Plane.

I think I’ve spelt out in full the whys and wherefores of this in the preceding monographs, in particular, the thirty-third monograph. But I also think I can’t repeat those reasons too much, so I will articulate them again, but I’ll add a new variation of explanation, or conceptualisation, by incorporating the specific flavour of this monograph.

Whenever we find ourselves in the soul-less state of Atlantis, as we are now, we've fallen low, very low into the abyss of Darkness and Separation. We don't actually fall so low by ourselves because we're not really capable of falling so low by ourselves. So we have to be seduced, tricked, lured, deceived, manipulated, moulded and shaped progressively, over a long period of time, gradually but surely descending lower and lower and lower.

Set's Self-imposed Sovereignty

And, surely by now, if you've read the preceding monographs, you Know very well who is manipulating us.

What you might not Know is that Set and the Dark Priests who harness his power can only seduce, deceive and manipulate us, certainly to the extent they can, and have, if and when they soundly defeat Horus, thereby thoroughly depriving us of his rule. This is why the Darkness could never truly and completely conquer and control Ancient Egypt.

Put a slightly different way, Set reigns supreme here, now, precisely because he has locked Osiris out and defeated Horus. In doing so, he has been given carte blanche to mould and shape his playground exactly as he needs it to be to establish, consolidate and perpetuate his own rule.

There's been no one and nothing to stop or stand against him. Until now.

The Son is the Way to the Father

Which brings me to the second reason why I've chosen the title of this monograph.

Before we can even begin to think about setting the Osiris Plane free, and to start Working with it consciously, we have to, first of all, confront Set, end his self-imposed sovereignty, clean up the Horus Plane, return and restore it to the Horus Rule, and clear away the devastation of Set's invalid rule. And this has to be accomplished at every level of our existence, individually, yes, but definitely collectively.

The reason this is so important . . . well, crucial, actually, is because we won't get anywhere near Osiris and his Kingdom without Horus. It is upon this most critical Truth that the distortion of the Christian belief of 'Jesus', the son, as the Way to the father is based.

Why reinvent the wheel? 'Tis one of the reasons why Set's deceitful religions have Worked so well and become so utterly entrenched. He took the fundamental Truths of Consciousness – Truths Consciousness responds to like the dry sponge and its water – and he twisted and distorted them to serve his own ends.

The Book of our Existence and its Pages

I know getting your mind around and understanding the principles of Consciousness that Horus and Osiris personify is not easily achieved, so before I go any further in this monograph, I'll try to address that.

Horus is, in Truth, much more than a ‘son’. As with ‘Jesus’, Horus is an emanation, or an incarnation, of Osiris, and, as such, the power of Osiris’s ascendant governance runs in Horus’s veins. Specifically, both govern, or rule, in such a way as to ascend Consciousness and progress the evolutionary journey of the soul, but whereas Osiris governs the umbrella of the higher plane, Horus governs the lower and its specifics in service to his father.

To further aid the conceptualisation of these two, think of our entire existence, as souls, beyond incarnation, as a book, and each and every one of our incarnations are single pages in that book. Osiris governs the overarching story of the whole book and its chapters whilst Horus governs the story of each page, and not just the story but the part each page plays, and how it fits, in the context of its chapter and the entirety of the book.

Progressing Through the Book

But this is equally applicable to us collectively at any point in space-time, like right now. Osiris governs the overall book of our existence with respect to where we are as a collective consciousness and what we’re Working on collectively, whilst Horus Works with each one of us, in our own incarnations, as part of that greater whole.

And as is typical of the metaphysical realm, Horus’s Work with this is bi-directional, as is Osiris’s, which means we contribute to the whole as it is but we also Work within, or use, the infrastructural context of it to learn, experience, and heal on an individual basis.

To progress through our own book, we must progress through each page. We cannot skip any just because we don’t fancy them, nor can we fast track them to get to a more exciting part of the book. Horus makes damn sure we don’t do either of these, which means many of us are living the same pages over and over and over . . . stuck needles!

Now do you see how important Horus is? Without him, we get stuck. With him, as I know from personal experience, he rather relentlessly and implacably keeps us on track.

Horus, the Son

Horus always rules in complete Connection with and in reference to his father and the story of the whole book. If I flip this Truth over, Horus never operates independently, on his own, or outside of his father’s mandate and will.

Do you see how easy it was for the Dark Priests to usurp this Truth, using and abusing it, and inverting it, to serve their Dark agenda, in Creating the iconic ‘Jesus’?

Translating the principle of Horus practically, into our day to day existence, he takes the form of Destiny, the Purpose that underpins our incarnation, and Destiny’s associated higher thoughts, ideas, dreams, interrelationships, and experiences. For those individuals who are bogged down by the burden of their karmic load, Horus will take the form of the specific karmic obligations that will and must be discharged as a matter of priority.

Do you remember the man with his keys in *The Matrix Reloaded*²? When they asked him how he knew what he knew, he told them, I know because I’m meant to know. And then he added, we’re all here to do what we’re all here to do. Well said. Without knowing it, he was referring to Horus and the Horus Rule, which absolutely includes and incorporates the Work of Isis and Nephthys. In fact, Horus provides, or is, the infrastructure within which, and with which, the sister goddesses Work.

The ‘plan’ of the Chairman in *The Adjustment Bureau*³ is another good metaphor for the Osiris Rule, and each member of the Adjustment Bureau analogously Works with Horus to keep all of us on track, following the right path in the right way and making sure we don’t go ‘off plan’.

The Significance of Archetypes

If you are wondering how Horus is Working with and through you in your current life there is no greater tool for understanding and Knowing how he is doing so than the archetypal energies weaved into the twelve layers of your DNA.

In previous monographs I outlined the fact that our higher-dimensional Self ‘chooses’, from a vast metaphysical library, a suite of archetypal energies to Work with, and these form the basis, or the bones, or the essence, of our DNA. Then, through our DNA, the energies weave together to form the fabric of our reality, our interrelationships, our experiences, our personality and character, our physical appearance, the lessons we’re to Work with, our interaction with the collective human experience, etc.

Archetypes are not just energies Horus Works with in an incarnation. Our archetypal energies are the form Horus takes in our specific lives. Perhaps now you can appreciate just how important these energies are, especially for those of us who wish to understand ourselves and the deeper meaning of our lives.

Not Doing What We’re Here to Do

So what happens to us when, courtesy of Free Will, we don’t do what we’re here to do?

I want to make very clear that I would never dare to make any sort of sweeping diagnosis with respect to depression and despair that would, then, be applicable to all of us as individuals. These are highly dangerous emotional states, as I know all too well, and so they must be dealt with on an individual basis. Our emotional landscape is unique to each of us, so how you use, interact with and interpret your emotions is for you to determine.

But I believe these two – depression and despair – are so rife, now, precisely because we have been deprived of Horus and his rule. Our lives have lost meaning, and we’ve lost the ability to Connect with Purpose. Without Horus, we’re wandering lost and aimless in a dark and desolate landscape, knowing something’s very wrong but unsure of what is wrong and, therefore, of how the heck we’re supposed to fix it. And many of us are aware of this.

Immobilising Dynamics

What’s equally as discomfiting, to say the least, as I also know from personal experience, is the sense we can have, deep within, that there’s something we’re meant to be doing but we know we’re not doing it, and we don’t know what it is or how to go about finding out. This feels like a splinter deep within that we can’t extract, or explain, and it can even generate pain. For me, this feeling grew in strength and intensity until it utterly immobilised me, although I was told, every time I reached out with my awareness, just be.

Perhaps more importantly, as I wrote earlier, we have to live each page in our books, fulfilling the Destiny of that particular page, before we can Move on, so if we fail to fulfil that Destiny, we will live that page over and over until we do fulfil its Destiny.

This is, very specifically, one of the ways Set and his Dark Priests have trapped so many of us here, forcing us back again and again, because they Know we must return again and again until we learn what we're here to learn and we do what we're here to do. And, this is also an important reason why they Know they must defeat Horus and rob us of his rule.

The Seamless Connection of the Higher and Lower Planes

The Ancient Egyptians Knew, and made it very clear to us in the depictions in their tombs, that Horus can, will, and must lead us to his father's realm. If I couch this in more practical terms, the two – the Horus Plane and the Osiris Plane – must be put back together.

By way of reinforcing this Truth, I will rephrase it. Returning to the rightful heritage of fourth-dimensional existence does not involve, or include, ditching or dispensing with the Horus Plane. On the contrary, it is a vital part of our existence, so far from getting rid of it, we need to put the two back together and Work with the Horus Plane the way we're supposed to, referencing the higher plane as Horus does.

The reason Set has turned the Horus Plane into his playground, and, especially, into its extreme form of Atlantis, is to prevent this happening. Once the power of Osiris starts to come through, as happens when we put the lower and higher planes back together, Set's rule is threatened, critically so. In Atlantis, rather than being the Way to the Osiris Plane, Set's Playground has become the means by which the Separation of the two planes – lower and higher – is being perpetuated.

The two – Set's Playground and the Realm of Osiris – are so discordantly out of sync they become the antithesis, each of the other – hell and heaven respectively – so they do not synthesise, fuse or mix. At all. They do not gel, or touch, or connect, and thus is the Perpetual Separation of Consciousness established, consolidated and perpetuated with Set's rule. We become, and we are, trapped in his playground, as is the intent.

Changing the Status Quo With Horus's Help

We have to change the status quo, and Horus can help us do so, not just because he gets us Moving again but also, crucially, because he Creates and establishes a culture, or state of being, within which Isis and Nephthys have the freedom to Work their magic. Hopefully, by now, you're aware of the essential role both play in the resurrection of Osiris.

If it hadn't been under constant attack from the Darkness, the Ancient Egyptian culture may well have been successful in re-establishing the Rule of Osiris, even with Free Will in the mix. Likewise, the Druidic cultures and the culture of Alexandria may well have achieved this, too. Alexandria was well on the way to restoring our heartbeat, which was why the Darkness moved against it until its Light was well and truly snuffed out.

Navigating the Horus Plane as We Should

What all this means for us practically is we must learn, or, more aptly, re-learn, to navigate the Horus Plane in a way that serves our higher good and our highest potential before we can fully return to the Osiris Plane or even Work with it as we can and should. This, I Know from very personal experience.

Perhaps more importantly, the only way to unleash the Creative force and power of Osiris and restore Creation is to put these two back together seamlessly.

Egypt, our collective grounding, or first chakra, or, more specifically, Gaia's lower chakra, can help us conceptualise this. Her lifeblood, the Nile, is sourced from an unseen place – the Osiris Plane – high up in the mountains south of her border, from where it flows seamlessly through the entire land – the Horus Plane – from Upper Egypt to Lower Egypt, fertilising and nourishing the land as it flows.

The Alchemical Binding Power of the Heart

This is what we must become, once again – upper and lower seamlessly connected, with the lower plane of our internal and external realities holding the power and nourishment of the upper. Or, if you prefer to Work with the tetrahedron of Consciousness, we must restore the Triangle of the Physical and put its three points – the conscious awareness, the subconscious and reality – back into Balance before we can be consciously re-merged with the metaphysical fourth point of our higher Consciousness.

And this marriage, this seamless Connection, takes place in the heart because the heart binds the metaphysical and physical parts of us, which is why we need to kick start our collective heartbeat and get it beating once again.

Do you see, now, why the Ancient Egyptians designated the south as 'upper' and the north as 'lower'? While the Nile was many things to them physically, metaphysically, it symbolised the power of Osiris, Creation and the Creative flow. Do you also see why the Dark Priests felt so compelled to obliterate the beautiful Light of Alexandria?

The Glorious State of the Horus Plane

We have to put the Horus Plane and the Osiris Plane back together, individually and collectively. But this will not and cannot occur until and unless we restore the Horus Plane to its former glorious state, and, with it, the Horus Rule.

I've already made it clear we do not need to die to return to the Osiris Plane, but doing so without dying, during an incarnation, requires so much Knowledge, dedication, passion, training, mental discipline, transformation, preparation and damned arduous Work that only a rare and precious few actually achieve it (we refer to them as 'Ascended Masters').

And this is not really the point or, more specifically, the Purpose of this human experience. We are meant to use the Horus Plane as a means of gaining the first hand, hands on, empirical experience that's determined, or governed, by the Osiris Plane.

The Son Facilitating the Rightful Rule of the Father

So, here, as humans, we do not need to return to the Osiris Plane completely, even in the fourth dimension. We just need to restore it, and Osiris, as the rightful ruler of Consciousness here, which means we need to Know about him and his Kingdom, we need to Know how to Connect with it, we need to Know how to Work with it, and, most crucially, we need to allow its power to flow.

Which is where and how Horus is so essential to us. In his restored state, Horus facilitates the rightful Rule of Osiris, and he holds, preserves, honours, and even protects Osiris's Creative power.

When the Creative force, sourced from the Osiris Plane, flows through the seamlessly Connected Horus Plane – the landscape of our lives and the terrain of our internal and external realities – we are able to perceive it and Work with it, even if we're not fully cognisant of what it is. We honour it. We give it full permission to be, and full expression. And it ascends us, progresses us, propels us forward, individually and collectively.

Eddie's and Susan's Examples

Once again, Eddie (the Eagle⁶) exemplifies this and provides us a golden opportunity to see the practical outworking of it. Eddie simply had a dream of Destiny (Horus) that he pursued with a single-minded focus because he could. Meaning, he wasn't programmed, or fooled, or lured, into thinking and believing his dream was a ridiculous fantasy. He wasn't beguiled, or hypnotised, by illusion, in other words.

What is truly important about his example, though, is the Truth that the Horus Plane of his internal and external reality was clear, free of the rubble of false mindsets, so it could hold the power of Osiris's Creative flow.

Because, vitally, his Horus dream held an even greater power. The real unmanifested metaphysical Truth, or, the pure abstraction of metaphysical Purpose, inherent in his dream, sourced from Osiris and the Osirian Realm, was to exemplify Creation and the freedom to Create thereby providing us an opportunity to be set free from the illusional programming, rules, restrictions, and conditions that are preventing Creation here (and so I could Work with his example in these monographs, which, again, I thank him for).

You can see the same dynamic at Work in Susan Boyle. She, too, had a Horus dream of Destiny to be a professional singer, and she, too, pursued it in full belief. But even though her dream held a deeper metaphysical power, sourced from Osiris, she didn't need to Know about it. She was just required to step out on stage and Create her dream, and through this, Osiris's power affected us all.

Unmanifested Power

So what was the Osirian Purpose inherent in her Horus dream? I think that's obvious so I won't spell it out in full. I'll just remind you of the old adage about judging books by their covers, especially when the cover is a little bit older than we deem acceptable for the Creation and fulfilment of dreams.

Eddie also did not Know the true unmanifested Purpose of his dream, did he? He was simply Creating his moment at the Olympics. As such, whilst he was absolutely Working with Horus and Isis, it wasn't necessary for him to operate out of, or in full Knowledge of, Osiris and the Osirian Plane. It wasn't a requirement for him to return to it consciously even though the power of it was fully flowing through him, his dream, and his reality.

Most of us are not required to return to the Osiris Plane consciously, but some of us are. Whether or not we are required to Work with it consciously, can you see in these two examples why Set so greatly fears Osiris's power? When both these people fulfilled the Destiny of their own page, we responded to them like the dry sponge and its water. We soaked up the message they implicitly held within them, and they challenged us to go beyond our rigid, limited and limiting, restrictive, unhelpful mindsets and beliefs.

Horus and the Egoic Beast

Once Horus and his rule is reinstated, he does rule.

Meaning, we are bound by his rule. We cannot sidestep, or operate, outside of its bounds, nor can we circumvent, deny or ignore it. We cannot go spinning off in our own directions, as per my analogy of the puppet skipping across his small stage in opposition to the pulling of his strings¹.

We cannot do our own thing, or go running after our own outcomes, pursuing the satiation of our own wants, addictions, obsessions, to the exclusion of all and anything else. Horus is usually not the least bit interested in wealth, for example.

This spells trouble for the ego, so anyone still identified with their own egoic Beast will not like the sound of this, or, for that matter, the actuality of it.

The Strength of the Horus Rule

Horus and Set, as principles, or gods, not real people, fought for millennia, as the Ancient Egyptian myths tell us. Sometimes Set gained the ascendancy over Horus, and sometimes Horus gained the ascendancy over Set. The Truth of this, and the ripple effects, can be seen across the many centuries of Egypt's history as their epic battle was waged against the backdrop of the pharaonic dynasties and the Ancient Egyptian culture.

When Horus gained the upper hand, Egypt was strong and she dominated the entire region without needing to conquer it. When Set gained the upper hand, Egypt was weakened, sometimes even brought to her knees, and a couple of times she imploded, collapsing like a house of cards in a strong wind, and was overrun and conquered.

One of the reasons Horus's rule was, and is, so powerful and so conducive to a strong, healthy, thriving culture, is the same reason why he could regain the ascendancy when it was lost. He never rules alone, as Set does. Indeed, he cannot rule alone.

The Sustenance of the Ennead Gods

Horus did not rule Egypt for so long on his own or even just with his queen, Hathor. Nor, therefore, did he ever fight Set alone, which the myths make very clear. The Ancient Egyptians, as we can see them, venerated Anubis, Thoth and Ma'at, and, of course, Osiris, Isis and Nephthys. As such, the Horus Rule of Ancient Egypt included and incorporated all five member principles of the Lower Ennead, and the higher principles of the Ennead.

These principle gods kept Egyptian consciousness steady and stable, ensuring Movement and Balance, and they kept its soil tilled, soft and pliant, fertilised, fed, and nourished, thereby facilitating the implantation, germination and growth of the seeds of Knowledge and Truth, which, in turn, facilitated the evolution of consciousness there.

With their help, Horus's rule took the form of the higher guidance (Hathor) and governance (Horus) of the king and priesthoods, the temples that formed the backbone of the culture, and the religion philosophy that governed daily existence, all of which were interweaved and underpinned by Knowledge, Truth and the Ancient Wisdom.

Although at times they did succumb to corruption and conflict, the priesthood was ultimately formed out of and based on the supremely healthy foundation of the Wisdom of Isis, which Horus always upholds because he Knows full well it is the very basis of his power and the strength of his rule.

But Horus did rule Ancient Egypt because, by the time of the first dynasty, humanity was already falling onto the Horus Plane in such a way as to begin to Separate it from the Osiris Plane. This was further critically compounded by the fourth-dynasty pharaohs who broke the power of the Hermetic configuration of the pyramids, turning the whole Osirian device into separated parts, and further compounded still by distortions that insidiously crept into the belief system, acting like a wedge between the dimensions of consciousness.

The Egyptian Gods – Evolution or Devolution?

I have no doubt many people will think we are regressing, sliding backwards, devolving rather than evolving, in returning to the acknowledgement, honour and veneration of the old Egyptian gods. But you have to realise, these gods are not Egyptian.

They are a Universal Truth, and they are the Universal Truth of Consciousness. As such, they hold True at the highest dimensional levels of the Universe, and they are beyond culture, beyond country, beyond anything physical.

The Ancient Egyptians Knew they didn't 'own' these gods. They inherited these gods, and then they preserved the Knowledge, thereby gifting that Knowledge, and the Wisdom these gods personify, back to us.

We will not take a step backwards by honouring the Ennead gods, Lower and Higher. We've already taken many steps backwards, so much so, we've fallen off the Snakes and Ladders board and now have to take a step back onto it, at square one. The Ennead gods will facilitate us taking this oh-so-needed step. Indeed, we cannot take this step without them because we've completely forgotten how to take it ourselves.

The Defeat of the Horus Rule

The Horus Rule of Egypt wasn't defeated decisively in one single battle. On the contrary, it was eroded, polluted, corrupted, dishonoured, violated, and, therefore, weakened over time, over many generations, and during the rules of multiple pharaohs. Obviously I didn't know Cleopatra personally, but I do and can point at least a finger of blame for the erosion of Horus's rule at her and her Ptolemaic dynasty.

They were outsiders. Conquerors, really. They were not born of the very essence of Horus's rule and the Ancient Wisdom that underpinned it, so they did not uphold either the rule itself or the Wisdom that formed a crucial part of its power, its soul. With maybe one or two exceptions, rather than honouring the soul of Egypt and allowing themselves to become infused by it, the Ptolemies imposed their own culture, and their will, on Egypt. They used her, and sometimes abused her, as did some of the pharaohs before them.

Ultimately, though, the defeat of Horus came not from within Egypt but, rather, from outside her. But this didn't occur just because the Romans decided to swallow Egypt whole, incorporating her into their empire thereby infiltrating and infecting her with their materialistic, self aggrandising society and their Setanic pursuits, ambitions, focusses.

No, Horus was defeated by the Romans because by the time he was defeated, the Balance of power, not just in the region covered and smothered by the Roman Empire but also well beyond it, had shifted from the Light to the Darkness.

Inviting the Devil In

Egypt never recovered from being swallowed whole by the Roman Empire. As one tends to do when one is devoured and thoroughly digested, Egypt lost her soul. Have you noticed that even today her identity is largely based on and tied up with her past, even for many who live there?

Cleopatra invited the devil into Egypt when she aligned and allied herself with Julius Caesar. Did she really think she was protecting Egypt? Or was it her own power she was more concerned with? She sacrificed Egypt to the scheming and plotting that was an inherent element of her power plays, and paid the ultimate price. She lost. Everything.

Julius Caesar again! He who cared for nothing but his own lust for power. He who sold a whole lot more than his own soul to satiate that same power lust. He who exterminated the Druidic cultures like vermin, extinguishing the flame of Druidic wisdom. He who established a new, set-in-stone conceptualisation of time, robbing time of its soul, and setting us at odds with Nature. He who upped the ante in the battle between Set and a weakened Horus that led to the final defeat of Horus and utter victory for Set thereby setting up and establishing the course and direction for humanity that has taken us straight down into the hellish existence of Atlantis.

The Vulnerability of the Horus Rule

The Horus Rule is powerful in its protection and governance of consciousness if it remains strong, resolute, undiluted and uncorrupted on the outside of us, in the infrastructure of our society, and if it retains its integrity and authenticity. And, perhaps more importantly, if we honour it on the inside of us.

But its inherent strength can turn, in a heartbeat, into its greatest weakness.

Whether king, priesthood or government, and for each of us individually, all that has to occur to turn strength into weakness is taking one's eyes, one's focus and perspective, and one's awareness, off higher Truths and Knowledge, as Peter took his eyes off his master when he tried to walk on water, so that the Connection between the higher and lower planes becomes diluted, weakened, unsteady. Then, the Horus Rule is threatened. Which, as we can see in our history, renders it vulnerable to defeat by Set.

If the Connection is further weakened, and then broken, by the lures, traps, and seductions of an entrapped focus, by the hypnotic bedazzlement of illusion, by the satiation of want, by the need to feed addictions and gratify obsessions, the Horus Rule can, and does, collapse like a house of cards in a strong wind. Or, more aptly, as we can see with Cleopatra, and as we can see around us today, the Horus Rule is utterly abandoned.

Religion as a Form of the Horus Rule

Is, say, Christianity a form of the Horus Rule, or any religion, for that matter?

In any specific church, if the authority remains absolutely, authentically and compassionately steadfast in its care of the people, and if it practices a freedom from judgement that facilitates experience, then, yes, it can be a form of the Horus Rule. It can steady and protect consciousness, and even provide a safe environment within which the soul can learn, experience and progress.

But even if authentic and strong, it can only ever be a mild form of the Horus Rule, a mere echo, and a faint one at that, for one very powerful reason. It still lacks the thirst-quenching power of Truth (Ma'at) and the nourishment of transcendent Knowledge (Thoth). More critically, far from being based on the Ancient Wisdom, Christianity, Islam and Judaism are all based on distortions of the Wisdom. Catholicism is just plain evil and doesn't pretend to be anything else.

In my experience of Christianity, and institutionalised religion, the Horus Rule even as an echo is rare. Christianity is not free from judgement. On the contrary, it comprises too many inflexible rules for being, with seemingly-damning consequences for violating those rules, that bind up the soul. And Christianity itself, as a whole, has been corrupted and inverted, literalised, robbed of its soul, and polluted with half-Truths and lies.

On the whole, or generally, institutionalised religion in all its forms is Set's tool, so far from leading us back to where we need to go, it's keeping us from ourselves. And, far from facilitating Movement, it's locking people in place, like sheep crammed into a fully-fenced, enclosed pen. And there are, also, far too many churches that use, abuse and exploit.

Cleaning Up and Clearing Out the Horus Plane Individually

The necessity for cleaning up the Horus Plane applies as equally to us as individuals as it does to cultures, groups and the collective. On an individual basis, cleaning up the Horus Plane inherently involves that same battle and Process of Restoration I wrote about in Monograph Thirty-three – the battle with Set’s egoic Beast and the restoration of the fragmented parts of the psyche.

We need to clean up our base, lower, egoic thoughts, beliefs, mindsets, intents, perspectives, and focusses. Or, put another way, we need to change the essence and consistency of the vat of oily egoic thought so that higher Osirian thoughts can penetrate and resonate and alchemically affect our consciousness.

Specifically, we need to clear out and remove the fears and shadowed thoughts, the illusional mindsets and beliefs, the toxic interaction with reality, the chaos of emotions, and the burden of karmic obligations that are associated with the Separated fragments of our psyche, all of which combine to form a mountainous pile of rubble that traps Osiris and Osirian thought, and keeps Isis and her most powerful tool – intuition – in exile.

For most of us, this rubble prevents even the most powerful of our higher, Creative thoughts, sourced on the Osiris Plane, from flowing through us and manifesting in reality.

The Metaphysical Power of Set

You might rightly recognise that Set is on the Osiris Plane, because so he is. But don’t be fooled into thinking he rules it. Remember, he cannot fight or even counter the power of Osiris in Osiris’s own Kingdom. And well does he Know this. In Osiris’s Kingdom, Set is, and always will be, subservient.

The best Set can do is Separate us from Osiris’s Realm and then fight and defeat Horus on the Horus Plane. And, tragically, he is damned good at doing this because he is on the metaphysical plane. Ultimately, despite all the strategies he implements on the Horus Plane to turn us into his Slaves, the source of his power is metaphysical.

This is why we can try to fight him on the Horus Plane, physically, but we will struggle to do so, especially at the moment, labouring under the burden of chronic ignorance, as we are. We do not have the assistance of Thoth, Ma’at, Isis and Nephthys, and Horus himself. Remember, even with their help, Horus struggled to defeat Set.

And remember, too, we are not actually on the Horus Plane as we should be. If we fight Set in his playground, where his egoic Beast absolutely dominates, and where everything is in place to feed the Beast and ensure its empowerment, he has such a definite advantage that we end up making little to no difference at all.

Fighting Set in His Playground

I am specifically mentioning this here because I can see people doing this, and I can also see that while some are doing so under the governance of Horus, as part of their own Destiny, many are not. On the contrary, they’re doing so because they fear what they can see and what the Dark agendas are causing us to do to ourselves, each other, and our planet. Not, of course, that I blame people for this. There’s just a better way.

I recognise what's going on because, by necessity, I learnt a harsh lesson with this in the last, not the current, Atlantis (and which I write about in *The Messiah Perspective*² if you're interested in knowing a bit more detail). I needed to learn this lesson in the last Atlantis so that I could bring it into this current Atlantis. For my own sake. So that I would not become one of those caught up in the maelstrom of trying to fight the Darkness where it cannot be defeated.

This is such an important point for a very simple reason. Set has to be fought where he can be defeated. We can fight him on the Horus Plane, only under the governance of Horus, but Set still has a clear and definite advantage because he rules it. So fighting him physically takes enormous effort, causes much angst, and invariably saps our strength, with little to show for that effort.

Adapting Strategies and Agendas

What's worse is if we make a loud enough or effective noise in fighting the Darkness on the lower plane we will draw their attention and the attention of those who serve them, and they have powerful mechanisms for tearing us down when they want and need to, as our history shows us and as I learnt the hard way from my experience in the last Atlantis.

And I'm not just referring to the obvious strategies of murder, assassination and genocide. There's more than one way to assassinate someone, as the psychotherapist in *Spotlight*⁵, Richard Sipe, experienced, and as depicted in the movie *Kill the Messenger*⁴. And there's more than one way to tear down higher ideas, ideals, Truths and Knowledge. The CIA's 'conspiracy theorist' label is merely one example of this.

They are able to adapt their strategies and agendas to cater for any fight back, and at the moment, they have powerful mechanisms for doing so, of which social media is one of the most powerful. And, they are able to hide their Dark agendas, and any adaptations they need to make, behind and within the illusional contexts they've built and fostered – contexts many people simply cannot see beyond.

The Power of Illusional Contexts

In the movie *Spotlight*⁵, for example, the team of journalists uncovered and then revealed to the world the systemic sexual abuse of children in the Catholic Church, and this was, at that time, enough for us to process and come to terms with. But surely it's not hard to take one more necessary step and recognise that paedophilic priests form a deliberate agenda of abuse in that church, and others – a conscious and very deliberate strategy of robbing children, and our human experience, of innocence.

These darkly-wounded priests are like hand grenades with the pin pulled, who are, then, under the guise of 'spirituality', with its accompanying ease of access and untouchable elevation, rolled into the community where they cause long-lasting ripple effects of harm, trauma and damage.

The Catholic hierarchy doesn't want to willingly take such an effective weapon out of the human equation. Good grief, no. For those who cannot see beyond the illusional religious context, it makes no sense whatsoever that the Catholic hierarchy relocated, even promoted, the various accused and implicated cardinals to the Vatican where they were rendered untouchable. But for those of us whose eyes are opened, it makes perfect sense. Why punish those cardinals for doing what they're mandated to do?

The other context that's been very successfully orchestrated and established, which people are utterly failing to see through and beyond, is the context of the Covid pandemic and, more specifically, its vaccine agenda. They are doing the most heinous things to us en masse, causing such incredible damage physically and metaphysically, and humanity is completely compliant.

Specifically, they are trying to accomplish two intertwined things with their Covid vaccines. They're trying to orchestrate a singularity of consciousness with themselves in complete control of that singular consciousness, and, perhaps more importantly, they're trying to render consciousness utterly incapable of transcending the Zombie state. We've even warned ourselves of this in our zombie movies⁹.

The Over-fed Beast

The stranglehold of indoctrination and programming the Darkness has on and over the conscious awareness means if we fight Set on the lower plane we also attract the attention of something equally as dangerous – Set's over-bloated, empowered egoic Beast.

In other words, we must remember that if we choose to fight Set here physically, on this lower plane, we're fighting him on two fronts. We're fighting the Darkness and those who consciously serve it, and we're fighting the human ego. I'm not entirely sure which of these packs the greater punch, especially when we remember that the human ego is not just outside of us. Until we conquer our own, it's also within us.

The vampiric ego will do all and everything it can to defend itself and its hold on the conscious awareness. And, as I have repeated many times, for good reason, in its defence of itself it can be utterly brutal. That brutality is easily and effectively turned against us when we fight Set in his playground. He makes sure of it. He can wind up his lobotomised 'horde', or 'legion', like toy soldiers, setting them loose where they do the most damage.

The Symptoms and Agendas of Set's Rule

Whilst so many people hold on with the grip of death to their 'blissful ignorance'², choosing to keep their eyes tightly shut, many more people are opening their eyes and seeing the symptoms, and even the agendas, of Set's rule. Seeing the Truth is, indeed, scary, especially when we really begin to acknowledge the depth and extent of it, and, of course, its ramifications.

But while seeing these symptoms and agendas for what they are is absolutely vital, what do we achieve by fighting them as symptoms when we remain ignorant of and, therefore, unaware of the need to cure the disease that gives rise to them?

What does physical protesting actually achieve, for example? We only end up exacerbating the polarisations Set himself is generating deliberately to set us against each other. In that sense, we're playing right into his hands.

Treating the Symptoms Without Treating the Disease

Fighting, or treating, symptoms without dealing with the disease will only ensure the disease continues to wreak havoc and ravage. And then it will just produce more symptoms that have to be dealt with.

Ultimately, though, fighting the symptoms of Set's rule without going further and treating the disease ensures victory for him for one powerful reason. The symptoms themselves capture, hold and trap focus on and in the physical, on the outside of us, capturing our attention in such a way as to keep us facing outward rather than inward, thereby preventing us from clearing out the Horus Plane on the inside of us to facilitate the flow through it of Osiris's power – the very power against which Set is rendered powerless.

And then, of course, once our focus is captured, our perceptions are also hijacked, and the symptoms we can see will generate fear. Fear is Set's greatest weapon, and capturing focus and dictating perspective are the dual aims of his strategies. Remember, focus and perspective are the twin pillars of transformational and transcendent change. If Set controls these, he controls what is and is not seen thereby locking our vision in place, in the shallows . . . in illusional physicality.

Put bluntly, or laconically, if we fight him out of fear, victory is his. Worse, we hand him that victory. On a god-damn silver platter.

Barely Striking a Glancing Blow

As has become typical for me whilst writing these monographs, I recently saw another old movie, *Armageddon*⁷ (appropriately!) and I was struck by the brilliance of the metaphor for this point I'm making. A Texan-sized asteroid is on a trajectory that will bring it into direct contact, or impact, with earth, and because of its size, the collision will cause the complete annihilation of every living thing on the planet, from bacteria and even cockroaches, to us, the human race.

In working out how best to deal with the situation, the group of assembled experts discuss the strategy of simply hitting the asteroid with nuclear weapons, thereby blasting it into harmless smithereens. But the scientists in the group put the kibosh on this idea by explaining that hitting it from the outside will barely strike a glancing blow, and certainly won't stop it or cause it to deviate from its lethal course.

If, on the other hand, they drill down into it, 800 feet, they can blast it from the inside. And because this is a Hollywood movie, there is, conveniently, even a fault line in the asteroid that will cause it to nicely split into two pieces, both of which will, then, go sailing by harmlessly on either side of the planet. If only carving off our ego was as easy.

When we fight Set on the physical plane, especially if we do so without reference to the metaphysical plane, or place within, we barely strike a glancing blow, but we end up in all sorts of trouble ourselves. If, on the other hand, we allow the Ladies of the Restoration Process to drill us down into our consciousness, there to fight Set and his Beast within, we do far more than barely strike a glancing blow. If we courageously persist, we rob him of his destructive power. And he hates that.

The Death Star of the Egoic Consciousness

The other wonderful analogy is the Death Star in the original Star Wars trilogy⁸. The rebels could not fight, let alone destroy, the Death Star from the outside. They were hopelessly unable to penetrate its shields and defences. But, they could destroy it from the inside. There was no defence in the Death Star itself to counter this strategy of attack.

Remember I wrote in previous monographs that once we find ourselves in the soul-less state of Atlantis, where the ego absolutely dominates consciousness, not even the Ancient Wisdom can penetrate the hard outer egoic shell and its defences and resistances. When we hit it from the outside, the egoic consciousness spits out, shuts down, and snuffs out the much-needed transformative, binding medicine of transcendent Knowledge and metaphysical Truth. It does Set's Work for him, in other words.

But when we confront and hit it from the inside, it flounders, especially once we free up our consciousness to accept, absorb and assimilate higher thoughts, because it has no real defence against these. It doesn't understand their nature or their power, and so, invariably, it doesn't even perceive them or their threat.

I think the Death Star is a wonderful analogy for the vampiric ego-dominated consciousness, but I also think the destructive power of both the asteroid and the Death Star is nicely symbolic of the destructive capabilities of the egoic consciousness. We're now staring down the barrel of annihilation, and we have orchestrated this ourselves, without any help from giant asteroids or Death Stars.

So How Do We Fight Set?

Hopefully, if you've grasped all that I've written above, you'll recognise the real question we need to be asking is not how do we fight Set but, rather, where do we fight Set. Again, at the risk of sounding like the needle on its broken record, we need to fight him where he can actually be defeated. Within ourselves. Within our own consciousness.

Once we come to terms with the Truth of this, we can then start to phrase the question as how. And the answer is startlingly and surprisingly simple. With Creation. Or, more specifically, with the power of Creation – the power of Osiris – which is why we need to fight Set within, because the power of Creation can only be set free, or unleashed, within.

Set and his Dark Priests cannot counter the power of Creation, not just because of its power, but, more importantly, because of where Creation is sourced, and, even more significantly, because of how consciousness responds to it (dry sponges and water). Just like the Death Star, they cannot conceive of any strategy to counter it, match it, or try to fight it, let alone defeat it, once it's unleashed. The power of Creation that we all hold within us renders Set's destructive power as ineffective and as useless as dry dust.

Turned-on Taps and Internal Portals

If we turn the tap back on within ourselves so that the power of Creation and, with it, higher Osirian thoughts, beliefs, Truths, ideas, ideals, dreams, mindsets come pouring through it, or us, we will change this, our human experience, beyond recognition.

To use a different metaphor, if we clear out and then open up the doorway, or the portal, within us to the Osirian Plane – the Kingdom of Heaven – we will unleash the beauty and extraordinariness of ourselves and it will pour out into this world in an unstoppable torrential flow.

The ultimate irony of unleashing the full force of Creation within ourselves is well worth considering at this point. We won't actually need to fight Set anywhere. Instead, we will arrive at a place within ourselves where we discover he doesn't actually have any power over us, and he doesn't and cannot actually control our Consciousness, and us, at all.

The Internal Tipping Point

Once we reach a certain point of success in clearing the Horus Plane of ourselves, or, rephrased, once we internally reach a tipping point of Balance, rather than Imbalance, Set and his Dark agendas don't even have to be a focus at all. At this tipping point, we have transmuted enough of those rubble fragments in our psyche to clear the doorway, or portal, within to allow the power of Osiris to start to come through.

Once it starts to come through, his power, in and of itself, facilitates the clearing Process exponentially, allowing more of his power to come through. We can think of the internal tipping point as the point of resurrection from which Osiris himself is able to actively contribute to his own resurrection Process.

He doesn't, in other words, stand rigidly where he is, waiting for us to come to him, tapping his foot impatiently. Just as the father did in the story of the Prodigal Son, Osiris does anything and everything he can to come to us, because he longs to wrap us in the warmth of his embrace as much, if not more, as we long to be thus enwrapped.

We have to remember, too, that when he comes through, his power merges with that of Isis, because they are reunited. There is no power in the Universe greater than their combined power. Really. When this occurs, we can simply get on with the job of Creating, and restoring, heaven on this earth. Set can, then, either get with the party and join in, or he can continue to try and do his own thing, but, either way, we'll just leave him to it. We'll have much more interesting, not to mention pleasurable, things to focus on.

A Tipping Point in the Monographs

And so, we have reached a tipping point of our own in these monographs, one I have long anticipated, because I have also reached it in my own personal transitional Process.

After all the Work I've done to clear the Horus Plane of my own internal and external reality, thereby putting the two – the Horus Plane and the Osiris Plane – back together, and after all the work I've done articulating that Work in these monographs, it's time for a thorough exploration of Creation – the good stuff . . . the really great stuff, actually. There really is nothing to rival it, not just as a power, but as an experience.

Fear is not just limiting, restrictive, and constricting, it is also contracting. It shrinks, shrivels and withers us. Creation is exactly the opposite. It is expansive, opening us up to whole new possibilities and potentialities, as Neo experienced and told us in his phone call.

The Brush Strokes of Creation

Creation raises us to greater, even limitless, heights, takes us beyond what we think we know and what we think we're capable of, facilitates whole new experiences, generates brand new ideas, and, best of all, at least in my opinion, it weaves stories into the fabric of our lives that are colourful, beautiful, epic, unique, different, individual.

The stories of Creation are just like the fairy tales of old, because, of course, the archetypes that weave together to form the fabric of fairy tale stories also form the very essence of our DNA. Which makes archetypal energies the brushes and the brush strokes used to paint the picture of Creation on the canvass of our reality. This is exactly why I say *there is a fairy tale locked inside every heart, waiting to be set free*¹⁰.

What this means for us is our archetypal energies are essential for a Process involving both sides of a rather vital coin – cleaning up and clearing out the Horus Plane of ourselves, or cleaning the canvass of our internal and external realities so as to remove the old illusional picture, and setting free the new picture of Creation.

When Neo started his training, Tank, his operator, said to him *I'm fairly excited to see what you're capable of*². Well, I, too, am excited to see what we are capable of, as Creators. I'm looking forward to bearing witness to the stories we will Create and the consequent effect on, and look of, our collective reality.

Splashing Around in the Toddlers' Pool

Since the symbolic element of Creation is water, when it comes to Creation we are, at the moment, splashing around in the ankle-deep water of the toddlers' pool, erroneously thinking we're swimming. Regardless of how hard we try or how much we try to convince ourselves otherwise, we simply cannot swim in ankle-deep water, especially when the pool is so small the water has nowhere to flow.

This stagnant and shallow water is the reason why we're not getting anywhere. And why we're not, actually, Creating. We're destroying.

This is a Truth we have to come to terms with, but there is something vital we need to Know and understand about this Truth. Splashing around in the baby pool is a part of what is being Created in this, our human experience, under the governance of Osiris. If Set is subservient to Osiris on the metaphysical plane, and he is, then this is a Truth that cannot, under any circumstance, even that of Perpetual Separation and illusion, be changed. Illusion is illusional, after all.

The Truth About the Rule of Set

So, in Truth, Set rules here only as part of the collective learning this time around, or in this iteration, and not just so that we can experience, first hand, the consequences of the, at times, horrific choices we make, and have made, under the auspices of our Free Will.

The dynamics associated with Perpetual Separation and illusion, including, but definitely not limited to, the masks we wear, the constructs of physicality we pursue obsessively, and the labels we use to define ourselves and hide behind, have afforded us the most incredible opportunities for learning and empirical experience. As such, Perpetual Separation is, ironically, a rather essential part of Creation for us here.

An Advanced Course in Perpetual Separation

We can think of this current iteration, which is coming to an end right now, as an advanced course in Perpetual Separation and the hypnotic hold of illusion, like completing a post-graduate degree, which is why so many souls have come in to learn about and experience it, and all the dynamics associated with it, first hand.

So, as an example, I was one of those school girls for whom, in reference to the lyrics of his own song, George Michael was my ‘pride and joy’. I had a giant-size crush on him as a young girl. When he died at the young age of 53 a few years ago, after supposedly having the world at his feet, I looked back on those days of innocence, his and mine, and I was incredibly sad at how his life turned out.

But then, as is typical for me, a documentary put me right. It allowed me a deeper insight into the dynamics of his life, and I realised his soul Created a powerful opportunity for learning, first hand, what it is to foster, maintain and hide behind a false image, and just how damaging, or, rather, soul destroying, this can be. In that sense, his life wasn’t sad at all. On the contrary, it was a potent learning experience that he is now able to Process, digest, absorb, and assimilate. What’s the bet he does a whole lot better handling the same dynamics next time around. And, this is Knowledge he can now gift to others.

The Truth About the Rule of Osiris

I’m making the point about what is being Created here, now, for two reasons. First, we really can disregard the erroneous and unhelpful belief that ‘God’ has abandoned us. This is not actually possible. If we’re going to insist on tossing around the word ‘abandonment’, especially as an accusation, then we need to point the finger of blame at ourselves, because it is us who, in our Perpetual Separation and illusional entrapment, with its obsessive pursuits, have abandoned ‘God’.

Remember, the myths of the Ancient Egyptians make it very clear to us we are Set’s co-conspirators. And so we are because, in our entrapment, we are frighteningly easy to seduce. And we don’t learn from our mistakes because we don’t Know enough to recognise those mistakes for what they are. If we fail to even recognise them as mistakes how, then, can we put them right or stop ourselves repeating them?

More crucially for us, though, is the Truth that Osiris does not ever really let us go. We might sever ourselves from him and push him away, but he is, in Truth, far more powerful than this, especially at the higher-dimensional levels of the Universal Consciousness.

Whilst we can, paradoxically, labour under the burden of illusional entrapment and, therefore, the appearance of being severed from him, pushing Osiris away and Separating ourselves from him is not actually, or ultimately, possible. I really am looking forward to this Truth expressing itself in this, our human experience, as he returns to re-stake his claim and re-establish his Rule.

He is returning, because he can, whether we consciously participate or not.

War as a Symptom of Perpetual Separation

The second reason I'm making the point about the learning afforded us by the illusional state of Perpetual Separation directly concerns Creation and, more specifically, the fatal break in the circuit of Creation that has caused us to become so utterly destructive. This, alone, has been fascinating, I must say, especially since, in the extreme, soul-less state of Atlantis, our destructive way of being knows no bounds. Quite literally, as World Wars I and II show us (and we weren't in Atlantis at the beginning of last century).

As destructive as those two world wars were, for all our supposed intelligence, we have neither learnt from them nor born the responsibility for them, taking a good, hard, long and thorough look at ourselves in the process. On the whole, or speaking generally, I would say we've conveniently laid the blame for those wars at the feet of individuals like Hitler, and then we've relegated them to pages in the annals of our history, which has very nicely distanced them from us, or us from them, and, at the same time, relieved us of the necessity of taking responsibility for ourselves and our plight, both past and present.

And so, as a symptom that holds all the dynamics of our wounded state of Perpetual Separation, war continues to be expressed and experienced in our modern world. And, as a symptom, war is now threatening to destroy us to the point of annihilation. In how many different places around the world, right now, is nuclear war starting to become a very real possibility, courtesy of insane megalomaniacs like Hitler?

Eating Fairy Floss to Assuage Hunger

For most of us, it won't be our own choice to unleash a nuclear holocaust on this planet, but if we allow ourselves to be lulled, or seduced, into the false belief that those people seemingly able to unleash such a global catastrophe actually hold the power to do so then we will be culpable.

Such a false belief only succeeds in surrendering, even forfeiting, our power to others who are, themselves, haemorrhaging personal power and, as such, are seeking to recoup the extreme energy loss with illusional power. This is very much like eating fairy floss to assuage hunger. It doesn't work.

Illusional power has absolutely no substance, just like fairy floss, as Cleopatra learnt the hard way, so the haemorrhage of personal power, for these individuals, is not plugged up, or stoppered, or even recouped, with the accumulation of illusional power. On the contrary, the haemorrhage continues at an alarming, and even a dangerous, rate.

Which is exactly why, as with Julius Caesar and Adolf Hitler and, now, Vladimir Putin, these people become very ill, physically and psychologically, and they die. Why wouldn't they? They've ignored the warning signs because their focus has been consumed by the illusional power they have been obsessively pursuing. The human energy system can only haemorrhage so much before it reaches a tipping point beyond which there is no return, no possibility of restoration, just like blood loss. Then, it's too late, and death is inevitable.

The Antidote to Destruction

The Truth is we all hold within us the power to stop any form of war, including nuclear war, and the other ways in which we are destroying ourselves and our planet, right here, right now. And we don't need to protest to do it. We don't, in fact, even need to leave our own homes to do it, and nor do we need lift even a single finger.

We all Create this human reality, remember, not just the vampiric, over-bloated egos at the helm of our greedy corporations and governments – those monsters who mistakenly believe they do hold the power to destroy us.

In fact, the simple Truth is we greatly outnumber them . . . or we would if we were to reclaim our own power, individually and collectively, and set free the antidote to destruction – the real, as opposed to illusional, power of Creation. We have the power to Create a current that will sweep those foolish idiots off their proverbial feet and show them just how powerless they really are.

This Truth is not a trite cliché, nor is it wishful thinking, and nor is it just a good idea. We can make it our reality, and we can Create it in our collective reality. Remember, we have a most vital and powerful ally on our side – Ushara, our Sun.

Moving to the Olympic-sized Adult Pool

So damaged and wounded have we become as Consciousness, and so broken has Creation become, that we now require a master class to re-learn and then remember how to Work with the power of it, and this despite the fact that it is absolutely inherent to our own Nature as Consciousness. Such is the extent to which we have forgotten the Truth of ourselves.

As we Move out of this currently-ending iteration and, at the same time, we Move into the new one, this master class is exactly what is required of us. Ushara, our Sun, is changing the underlying infrastructural canvass of our existence so that it will no longer support Perpetual Separation, illusional entrapment, broken Creation, and Set's rule of destruction.

She's Moving us out of the kiddies' pool, but she's skipping the middle-size pool and taking us straight into the Olympic-size big pool, with its ever-increasing depth of water, under the waterline.

Water Euphemisms

This is, admittedly, quite a leap, or a big transition, with an accompanying large adjustment we're going to have to make as part of the Process. Some people will take to it like ducks to water, some will hate the transition and resist it with every ounce of their egoic will, some will flounder and struggle to stay afloat, let alone swim, some will thrive, and some will find they are simply able to go with the flow.

Whichever of these is our own personal experience of the transition, the Knowledge of what is occurring and why, and the Knowledge of Creation itself can potentially, and will for many, steady our own individual ships, making it easier to make the necessary adjustment. Please forgive me all the water euphemisms, but they do so beautifully convey the point.

Spending Time in the Middle Pool

Although collectively we're being taken straight into the big pool, individually, in our own restoration Processes, we will spend time in the middle-size pool where, as part of our own adjustment and transition, we will have opportunities to Work with the juxtapositions of Separate lower and higher thoughts. Or, put another way, we will have an opportunity to Work with ourselves as a cocktail of illusional egoic mindset and belief and higher-dimensional thought, including transcendent Knowledge and metaphysical Truth.

Spending time in the middle pool, for some of us, including me, facilitates the recognition of both heavy lower and lighter higher thoughts to distinguish them and then Work with them consciously, including their respective natures and their different effects on consciousness and reality.

For anyone who finds him- or herself in the proverbial deep end of the big pool straight up, and there will be some who do, you can rest assured in the Knowledge that this has occurred because you can handle it. You have specifically trained and prepared for this transitional period of our evolution, so you either do not need to spend time in the middle pool or you need spend only a brief period in it to facilitate the adjustment from destruction to Creation.

Or, from the lower state of being to a higher state of being. Or, from this Separated third-dimensional existence to the fourth-dimensional existence of our new iteration. You are one of those powerful individuals here to ascend humanity into its rightful heritage of the fourth dimension.

Creation's Natural Flow

I love the analogy of the Nile as symbolic of Creation because Creation really does flow, seamlessly, in one direction, just like a river of water and also just like energy. It can, and often does, change its course, like a bend in a river, which is, invariably, courtesy of Isis and her ankhs, but it still flows in one direction, just as a river does.

The flow of Creation also holds the power of a current just like a river such that swimming against its flow, or its current, can be all but impossible, certainly utterly, and sometimes dangerously, draining if we try.

When we consciously give the flow of Creation permission to be, and then we consciously participate, or, we become consciously attuned to and merged with it, as we do with Conscious Creation, changing our minds or erroneously believing we can harness the power of it to assuage egoic hungers and feed egoic will is akin to swimming against the current – absolutely impossible. We simply cannot swim against the power of the current once we've unleashed it.

Because flow really is Creation's fundamental Nature and its natural state, once we clean up and clear out the Horus Plane of ourselves, we do set free that flow, like turning on a tap that cannot, then, be turned off. Or, like flicking a switch to release the current of electricity through an appliance. This is a rather good analogy because when we set free Creation's flow we really do work properly.

Merging Tributaries of the Creative Flow

As it flows, the current of Creation is joined, or merged, by many tributaries that flow into it, forming a part of it, and it also has many tributaries that flow out from it to nourish the landscape of our reality. And, this Process occurs not just in our current lives but also across and through all the different lives we live, which is, sometimes, why we struggle to perceive its flow.

This is why I describe Creation as a symphony, because it really does comprise a myriad of different notes – people, interrelationships, events, incidents, circumstances – many different themes and phrases, multiple instruments, multiple lives, both our own and each others', and multiple dimensions at many different dimensional levels of the Universal Consciousness.

The merging of the tributaries of Creation that flow into and out from its flow occur for us on an individual basis, in our own lives, through the landscape of our own internal and external realities, outside of the barrier of linear time. But that's just for starters.

This merging Process also occurs for us another way. The Creative Processes, or Destinies, of our own lives (Horus) feed into, merge with, and become part of a greater flow (Osiris) that transcends individual lives to influence and affect consciousness and to change the direction of our human experience, at every level of it.

The way our Creative Processes interact with, intersect, and connect with the Creative Processes of others is masterful, and supremely powerful. The metaphysical, and physical, ripple effects of the merging tributaries in these intersections roll out unceasingly in all directions of time, leaving sweeping, even momentous, change in their wake. And this change has definite, and seemingly-miraculous, manifestation in the fabric of reality.

An Example of Creation

In 1999, long before I was anywhere near capable of comprehending my Horus Destiny, long before I knew Horus had any relevance to me at all beyond my fascination with the Egyptian gods, and long before I'd ever heard of archetypes, I saw The Matrix for the first time, and afterwards, I drove home in a numbed state of shock.

As was usual for me back in those days of my chronic ignorance and illusionary entrapment, whenever transcendently-significant things happened, especially in my reality, they tended to cause my conscious mind to shut down. I describe it as feeling as if my mind has suddenly become stuffed with cotton wool, and when it happens I am rendered wholly incapable of conscious thought. I really mean this. I must appear to others as if I've become catatonic.

Well, after seeing The Matrix for the first time, I definitely became catatonic.

The Passionate Kiss of Osiris

Once my mind started thawing out a little bit, thereby facilitating a rather hesitant flow of conscious thought, I remember becoming aware of a deeper sense that was filling me up internally, as if it was weaved through my entire energy system, even though I didn't know about our energy system at the time.

This inner sense (sounds like innocence, for good reason) powerfully usurped my physical senses as my primary means of cognition, as if my higher Self had swatted, or swept, aside my conscious awareness for a brief moment to communicate something transcendently important. Put simply, the movie touched and stirred my Consciousness at a depth I wasn't yet able to comprehend – a part of me I was wholly unaware of at the time.

Although I was unable to describe this sense, or feeling, fully at the time and certainly didn't understand it, I now know it was recognition, or inner Knowing.

When these experiences occur for us, the conscious awareness, for most of us, is wholly incapable of grasping them cognitively, especially at the moment, in our currently-ignorant state, because they are, quite simply, beyond its, and, therefore, our, frame of reference. What I mean by this is these kinds of experiences are beyond the outer limits of our knowledge, experience, beliefs, mindsets and understanding.

In these experiences, we are touching the Osiris Plane. Or, more accurately, it is touching us, directly, as if Osiris himself has reached out of the mists of the metaphysical realm to kiss us, passionately . . . not gently, either. For those who have experienced this I'm sure you will agree with me when I describe the sheer power of it as stunning, breathtaking. The power of it certainly can tend to leave us breathless.

The Chicken and the Egg

If anyone ever offered to make a movie of my life, I would have to tell them a movie of my life, or a vital part of it, has already been made. It's called The Matrix.

I have a clear memory of saying to the person I was with at the time I first saw the movie, I don't understand how this is possible but I think The Matrix is extremely significant and relevant not just to humans generally but to me personally. In fact, I think it's been made for me.

How is it possible a group of people – writers, producers, directors, actors – who don't have any idea of who I am or of what I'm here to do Create a movie that so profoundly mirrors my own Transitional Process I've been able to clock where I am in my own Process by matching it metaphorically, and precisely, to the specific events in Neo's Process?

And was Neo's story predictive, pointing the way for me, communicating what was in my future, or did I unconsciously Create my own Process on the basis of it?

Under the frame of reference that is Creation, what does it matter, either way? When it comes to Creation, you cannot tease these two apart – prediction, or precognition, and Creation – just like the chicken and its egg. Never more so does this paradox apply than in the frame of reference that is Creation. Nothing ever really comes first, and, at the same time, everything does, because everything feeds into everything else.

The Breadth, Depth, Scope, and Power of Creation

Such is the power of the merging tributaries of Creation that a group of people I have never met Created a movie that has fed so powerfully into my Work, not just my writing but also my own personal Process, that I'm not sure I would've made it this far without it.

As I hope you've noticed, I've been able to use The Matrix powerfully in these monographs, analogously, metaphorically, and descriptively, but the real power of my Work with it in these monographs lies in the fit, or the perfect match, of the concepts, principles and experiences of the Metaphysical Transition with the portrayal of the specific scenes in the overall context of Neo's story. Put simply, Neo is validation, and he has, for me, been the guiding light that has illuminated my own stepping stones.

Likewise, the Creative flow of Eddie's experience has flowed directly into my own Creative Process, and, as an example, I have been able to Work with his story beautifully in these monographs. But as with The Matrix, his example has formed a part of my own personal Process, and I have been, and still am, inspired by his example.

The Matrix and Eddie's story beautifully highlight and illustrate the most powerful, profound and wonderful Nature of Creation: Creation feeds into Creation in a never-ending Process, and this Process really does know no bounds or boundaries or rules, or have any limitations.

The Stories of Creation

Had I not seen The Matrix and been able to Work with it, I would have said portraying or depicting the concepts and principles I've been explaining was impossible. Yet The Matrix so perfectly captures those same concepts, principles and experiences that I really have to describe it as 'divine inspiration', certainly divine connection.

But that's exactly what the power of Osiris – the power of Creation – is.

There are many of us here, now, specifically Working to Create the restoration of Consciousness and Creation, to ascend human Consciousness, and restore this human experience to its rightful state of heaven. Are you one of these people? If so, what are you here to Create as part of this profound and powerful Process? What is the story locked within your heart that, if set free, would significantly add to the current, and the colour and vibrancy of Creation here?

Fantasy or Reality

Although the feeling I referenced above after first seeing The Matrix stayed with me for a long time afterwards, nothing else happened. There was no follow up experience, no metaphysical reminder, like an LSD trip spontaneously revisited many years afterwards. And, of course, the daily grind of my mundane, ordinary physical existence once again staked its claim and completely took over.

As, I suspect, most of us tend to do in these situations where our higher consciousness has cut across the mundanity and normality of everyday reality, like a hot knife through butter, and challenged us with something we're unable to understand, I thought I'd imagined the whole experience, or made it up, and so I relegated it to the backbenches of my internal awareness. My memory of it faded, or receded, as I dismissed it accordingly.

Until, not quite three years later, it came back with a vengeance, once again cutting through the mundanity of normality and sweeping aside my illusionary beliefs about the original experience the way a bowling ball smashes aside skittles. When these experiences of Creation occur for us, they usually don't stay relegated to the backbenches for long, and, invariably, they are not allowed to be dismissed as irrelevant fantasy for long, either.

Specifically, nearly three years after that original experience, I had another experience, this one wholly internal, and I recognised it instantly courtesy of the uncannily-accurate portrayal of it in The Matrix. Neo experienced it as a two pill choice, but I experienced it as a two path choice, and I could even see down one road, knowing exactly where it ended, and knowing it was not where I wanted to be, as per Trinity's description of it².

Fighting the Sentinels of Illusion

If you're wondering how I feel about all those individuals who were involved in bringing The Matrix and, more specifically, Neo, into this reality, I am eternally and profoundly grateful, so much so, expressing that gratitude in words seems utterly inadequate.

If you're wondering where I'm up to, in terms of how my Process matches Neo's, right now, as I write this, I'm at the point where he fights the illusionary sentinel, or agent, Smith, and Smith has him in a headlock on train tracks, with a train bearing down on them, and the screech of its wheels on the track forming the sound of inevitability Smith referred to². This scene is metaphorically echoing in the circumstances of my own reality.

So, yes, I am wondering how Neo's final confrontation with Smith, when Smith shoots him dead, will metaphorically play out for me internally and externally (yikes!).

These scenes, during which Neo fights the agent, Smith, depict a crucial confrontation, not just as part of the story line of The Matrix, but, more significantly, as part of the latter stages of the Metaphysical Transition.

Neo is confronting illusion and illusion's hold within himself. But, given the inherent association of illusion with reality, this confrontation will and must have physical expression and manifestation, as it is for me right now. I apologise for not providing you with the details, but they are too personal to share publicly. And, so you know, the monograph following this one will explore the dynamics of these Processes in greater depth and detail.

Suffice it to say, the metaphysical meaning inherent in these experiences is identical for each of us. They reveal the powerlessness of illusion versus the breathtaking power of Creation, and they are opportunities of choice to see the difference and operate out of the latter rather than the former. But the guise, or manifested form, of them in reality is individualised, as they must be, because we are all uniquely different.

The Chaos of Destruction

The flow that applies to Creation, or is a foundational characteristic of Creation, simply does not and cannot ever apply to destruction. When destruction does not serve or form a part of the Process of Creation under the guidance of Nephthys, the two, as states of being, are polar opposites. So while destruction, too, comprises many threads, phrases and themes, these are never seamless, never coherent, never resonant, never uni-directional.

On the contrary, because the themes and threads of destruction are purely self serving, they move in any and every direction, often frenetically, invariably tugging and pulling at and against each other, clashing, colliding, and conflicting. Which is why chaos reigns supreme whenever and wherever destruction is the order of the day, as we can see when we look around us at the moment.

Reduced to a Mere Trickle

As Eddie and Susan exemplify, there are exceptions to the point I'm about to make, but these really are the exception rather than the rule. At the moment, for many of us, Creation's flow has been reduced to a mere trickle, and for many more, its flow has been rendered all but non-existent, or pretty-much dried up, like many of the rivers around the world that have disappeared in drought conditions. Not coincidentally.

When Creation is set free to flow as it should, the power of its flow naturally gains momentum, which occurs automatically with each piece of rubble, fear, false mindset and illusional belief removed from our psyche. As it gains momentum, the flow of Creation sweeps us up and along on its powerful current. It takes on a life of its own, but we are more than willing to go with that flow, as Eddie showed us.

When we become Conscious Creators, fully cognisant of what we are Creating and fully consciously participating in it, Creation really is effortless, and even a fleeting thought can become manifest in reality. Or not, depending on the Creative Process.

The Effect of Creation on Thought

What is even more interesting about releasing the flow of Creation is the effect it has on thought and thought processes. Thought itself becomes like a torrential flow of water through a released dam, and it can even flood our conscious mind the way the Nile floods the landscape during its seasonal inundation.

Working with the guidance of Isis is, then, a truly phenomenal experience. She is able to use our intuition, vision and/or our external reality to alter the course of this current in the blink of an eye, powerfully, and with the gentlest and lightest of touches. And she is also able to release the potentiality of Creation the same way.

Do you recall what I wrote in earlier monographs about the power and potential of 'what if' thoughts? These thoughts often come so far out of left field and can be so extreme in their breadth and depth that they tend to be disregarded or written off as wishful thinking and fantasy. Yet, those individuals who don't disregard these thoughts but, instead, choose to entertain, develop and pursue the possibilities they raise can tend to change the status quo for us and make supremely significant contributions.

Well, once it gains momentum, the flow of Creation tends to generate these kinds of thoughts with increasing regularity and prevalence. When the canvass of reality supports and then holds the manifestation of these thoughts, the effort expended lies in trying to keep up with them.

The Relationship Between Thought and Creation

Apart from breathing, is there anything we do more naturally than think?

Well, for some of us, anyway. You'll have to excuse my cynicism here but I have observed that too many people appear to find thinking utterly bothersome, so they don't rouse themselves, but seek, instead, the mind-numbing state offered by addictive escape.

Thought isn't just a tool of Creation. Thought is how we Create, and thought is what we Create, and thought is why we Create.

So what do people Create when they don't bother thinking at all? They don't Create. Like true Clones, or sheep, or zombies, they destructively go with the flow of what Set has caused to be here, now.

So intrinsically are thought and Creation related that if we shut down our thoughts, or switch them off, or disconnect from them, we also automatically shut down and switch off our Creative ability.

Transitioning Thought from the Lower to the Higher Plane

Ultimately, it's thought we are actually transitioning from the lower to the higher plane. Ultimately, it's thought Horus, Isis and Nephthys are Working on, with and within us, transforming and transmuting it. When thought even begins to resonate with the Osirian Realm, we naturally and inherently return to a higher state of being – that same Kingdom of Heaven Yeheshua ('Jesus') referred to in his teachings.

If I re-word this, thought is the very thing we are dragging up out of the quagmire of Set's hellish Playground into the Light of the higher plane, especially the thoughts we hold about ourselves. It's the thoughts that fill us to overflowing that we will, in the new paradigm of our existence, transmute from lower, dense, heavy, illusional physicality to higher, lighter metaphysicality.

Neo's Phone Call

Which is why we must clean up and clear out the Horus Plane of ourselves and remove all the toxic effects of Set's invalid rule. Unless and until we do this, the canvass of our reality will only hold that old, harmful picture of illusion Set has caused to be, here.

In holding only the old picture, we're not just locking reality in place, rendering it immovable and immutable. We're actually locking ourselves in, right where and how we are, rendering ourselves immovable and immutable. Hence Neo's phone call: I'm going to show these people what you don't want them to see – a world without rules and controls, without borders or boundaries – a world where anything is possible².

He was talking about Creation.

Follow Me and Live Forever

Yeheshua ('Jesus') never said whoever believes in me shall not perish but will have eternal life (John 3:15-16). He said whoever follows me shall not perish but will have eternal life. What he actually said was follow me and live forever.

But he didn't mean this physically because Separated physicality was a language he did not speak. He meant it metaphysically. If we try to follow him into the Light of the Osirian Realm by copying his behaviours or blindly adopting his teachings and turning them into rules for being, as the institutionalised religions have done, we will only continue to stumble around in darkness, within and without.

I've said this before, and I will keep saying it because it is the Truth. As the egoic edifices of this Separated third dimension crumble into dust, the human soul will remain standing, and it will be wonderful to behold.

The question for you is will you be one of those left standing?

Author's Note: I deliberately use capital letters to denote higher-dimensional concepts and to distinguish these from the common, lower-dimensional use and definition of the words.
